Baking Powder.

Who makes Baking Powder fresh pure
That causes my bread to be light and sure
And my Husband's smile to always endure,
Dr. CROUTER.

Then at once to Dr. CROUTER'S go
And get some Baking Powder pure as snow
'Twill make your husband laugh and children grow.
And don't you forget it.

I've tried it now about twenty times
And all it costs is just four dimes
But its astonishing to see how the biscuit climb
At our house.

Local News.

—The Fountain City House has a new roof.

—It is lawful to catch as many brook trout as you can now.

—Rev. H. H. Whitman occupied the M. E. pulpit Sunday morning.

—1,000,000 white fish fry have been planted in Little Traverse Bay.

—Traverse City will escape another newspaper, but will have the salvation army.

—The Boyne telephone line between here and Boyne City will be in working order early in June.

—John C. Rumney and family of Detroit, will occupy the Kirkpatrick cottage on the resort this season.

—Notice the new time card of the Hannah & Lay boats. Their new arrangement is the complete embodiment of convenience.

—During the 18th blast (123½ days), ending April 19, the Elk Rapids furnace made 21,050 tons of iron. It will go into blast again about June 1.

—During the next four weeks is the time that the petty thieving on the resorts generally occurs. This year the wardens are unusually vigilant and it will go hard with the thieves if they are detected.

—Charlevoix cross walks are being relaid.

—Plant your advertisements where they will do the most good.

—Three hundred new books will be added to the township library.

—Norwood and Charlevoix will be connected by telephone early next month.

—Mrs. Washburn who has been living here this winter returned to her Harbor Springs home last week.

—The legislature has passed a bill postponing indefinitely the tax sales which were advertised for May 4th.

—Col. Wisner has abandoned East Jordan and opened an office in South Arm, opposite the Eagle hotel. Where next?

—The Charlevoix Manufacturing Co. are building a two story office, glazing and moulding room just northwest of the main building.

—Register F. J. Meech and County Clerk Thatcher have formed a copartnership for transacting a general real estate and abstract business.

—The council have ordered a six foot walk on the north side of Dixon avenue, extending from Bridge street to the corner beyond the Dr. Lewis double house.

—Petoskey expects two more saloons under the new administration. It is only a question of time, however, until Petoskey Prohibitionists learn a thing or two.

—Trailing arbutus is due. If you have friends that you wish to make hate themselves, just lead them to believe that it grows abundantly on two mile point north.

—We are glad to announce that Dr. Chamberlain and family and F. J. Meech and family will occupy the former's spacious new home on the south terrace, this month.

—The case of S. Goldman vs. Dr. Bailey, of Elk Rapids, for malpractice, which was once tried in the Antrim circuit court, the jury failing to agree, has been withdrawn by the plaintiff.

—The Boston Telephone, the national organ of the telephone exchanges, states that Charlevoix has more telephone subscribers in proportion to its population, than any town in Michigan.

—Mr. Arthur Stone and family of Kalamazoo, Mrs. Chas. Hinman of Battle Creek, and Gen. King and family, the family of Dr. McGraw and others from Detroit, will spend the season here.

—The SENTINEL celebrates its seventeenth birthday to-day.

—Work on the upper channel revetment began last Wednesday.

—Louis Wideknel is working at the abstract office of Meech & Thatcher.

—The promise for a large number of summer visitors, continues to be excellent.

—F. J. Smith of Petoskey has 26 mail routes in New York and 17 in Pennsylvania.

—Gen. Grant's health and the prospects for Anglo-Russian Peace, both continue to improve.

—The Bridge Street House office has been repainted and the whole house put in shape for summer trade.

—Thos. H. Noble, formerly wood buyer for the Iron Co., at Elk Rapids, has a position in Chicago with N. K. Fairbank & Co.

—Cadillac thinks it sees four railroads coming towards it in the near future. Three of them will no doubt terminate at Charlevoix.

—Bradbury, whose days are numbered unless he ceases to pun, says that the Clara Bell looks well and that her whistle sound's well.

—Allen P. May is to have charge of the Palace skating rink at Petoskey during the coming season. He will leave Kalamazoo for that place soon.

—Mrs. H. S. Harsha, the lady who prepared the excellent paper at the final Historical, has been, and is a contributor to the Atlantic and Century magazines.

—Rosenthal & Son invite their old and new friends to call and examine their mammoth new stock of goods. "Abe" and "Al" are brimfull of business vim.

—We call attention to the new ad of Miss Spaulding. The ladies will find her stock well selected. Her growing business has rendered an addition to her building necessary.

—Mr. John Mitchell, the U. S. Asst. engineer reports from eleven to sixteen feet of water in the lower channel. The shoalest place is abreast the end of the south pier for five or six rods, and the deepest ten rods below the bridge.

—The Oval Wood Dish Co. are erecting an addition to their factory at Mancelona, to be 40x100 feet. This will make the 6th of these massive buildings, and, were their entire buildings placed end to end, they would make a building forty feet wide and nearly six hundred feet long.

—Boyne Statesman: "The citizens of Charlevoix village have set an example which it would be well for Boyne City to follow. They have organized themselves into an association for the purpose of advancing the interests of their town, including immigration and the location of manufactories. No doubt much good will come from it."

—Torch Lake and Eastport are soon to have a daily mail. The new schedule provides that the mail shall leave Elk Rapids daily except Sundays at 1.30 p. m. and arrive at Eastport at 6 p. m., leave Eastport at 6.30 a. m. and arrive at Elk Rapids at 11 a. m. Between Eastport and Charlevoix the service will be three times a week each way.

—The Charlevoix Improvement Association invite correspondence. Any reader of the SENTINEL having in mind a person who would like to make money in a hard wood manufactory of any kind, a tannery, a fish canning establishment, a grist mill, or any other manufacturing industry, or who desires a home in the "Paradise of Michigan," should write to this association for particulars. Think this thing over. Now is the time to come.

—Traverse Bay Eagle says: "Dr. Leach informs us that the proposed publication of the Traverse Journal is indefinitely postponed. In canvassing the town for advertising the encouragement received was not sufficient to warrant the commencement of the publication. This is the second time the publication of a third paper has been attempted in Traverse City and failed. Who comes next?

—The stockholders of the Northern Manufacturing Company at Boyne Falls have executed a trust deed of all the property belonging to the corporation at that place to L. J. Rindge of Grand Rapids and Charles Root of Detroit, to close up the business. The total liabilities of the company are $6,500, distributed among creditors in Grand Rapids, Detroit and Chicago. The property consists of a saw mill, planing mill, handle factory, logs, lumber and merchandise.

—General Cutcheon requests the newspapers of the 9th district to call attention to the fact that the naval cadetship to which this district is entitled is still vacant, and that he would be glad at once to hear from any young man, between the ages of 14 and 16 years, who wishes to be considered a candidate for that position. Candidates must be physically sound, of good moral character, and of a grade of advancement in studies sufficient at least to admit to a high school. Applications should be addressed to General Cutcheon, at Manistee.

—Operetta to-night.

—Traverse City will hold her salt.

—J. P. Woodbury is expected to-day.

—Battle Creek wants the soldiers' home.

—Petoskey has a new lodge of Knights of Pythias.

—Capt. Robert Roe of Fox Island has moved to Harbor Springs.

—Elk Rapids reform club have voted to build a $400 reading room.

—Elk Rapids wants somebody to give it $2,500 worth of water works.

—Amos Fox's fine large Durham cow died last week from eating too many frozen turnips, clandestinely secured.

—The council have ordered that all the trees growing in the line of the side walks and all those in the center of the streets, shall be removed.

—Hon. John S. Dixon, agent of the State Board of corrections and charities, recently took a Boyne City girl to the railroad at Boyne Falls, where she was sent to the Adrian Reform School for girls.

—H. W. Page of Kalamazoo was the first resort arrival of the season. He arrived yesterday. J. L. Sebring, who arrives to-day, with Mr. Page constitute a committee on resort dock, sewerage, etc. and these interests will have immediate attention.

—Miss M. DuPue arrived last week to take charge of the millinery and dressmaking for Miss L. Spaulding. As she has spent her time since March 1st in a wholesale millinery and dressmaking establishment, she comes prepared to do some very fine work. Give her a call.

—At the last council meeting the liquor bonds of Gerlock & Ingalls with Nelson Atkins and F. D. Smith as bondsmen were approved. Also the druggists' bonds of Geo. Crouter, with E. M. Clark and W. A. Brown bondsmen, and F. G. Hines & Co., with B. Cooper and A. R. Upright, bondsmen.

—Mr. Geo. E. Hannah, of Traverse City, was in town Saturday, looking up the business of Hannah, Lay & Co's steamers, in matters of freights etc. Mr. Hannah will be the company's shore man at this end of the route, and will be both here and at Petoskey and Harbor Springs, as occasion requires, to adjust all matter pertaining to freight. Business men will find him an upright and obliging gentleman.

The SENTINEL does not depend upon any other paper for its main supply of local matter, averages 120 inches of purely local matter to 80 inches in the next largest paper in the county, and for money or marbles has 300 or more more circulation than the said paper, exclusive of dead heads and exchanges, and by reason of sixteen years existence in Charlevoix, has a much more respectable class of subscribers, is double the size of any paper in the county, has double the running expenses and because it is furnished to subscribers at the same price of inferior journals it has and will hold the largest patronage.

—Vanderbilt Review: The village of Charlevoix is making a long stride in the right direction. By a recent vote of the county it was decided to move the county seat from that place, where it had been so long located, to East Jordan. Instead of sitting down and mourning over this loss the Charlevoix business men and citizens assembled in a public meeting one day last week and effected a permanent organization for the purpose of encouraging and promoting manufacturing and business enterprises into the place. This move shows the public spirit of the citizens, and there are many other towns in this part of the state that would do well to follow the example.—Vanderbilt among them.

The burden of our appeal now is for a flouring mill. The necessity has long existed, and we have exhausted the entire lexicon of words in endeavoring to impress the subject upon the minds of capitalists. Every condition is favorable for making such an investment a profitable one. The grain supply for a $20,000 mill would be forthcoming. Such a mill would make business for itself, from the fact that it would stimulate the raising of grain in two years to double the present yield. A glance at the map of the Pine Lake region will convince any one that this is the most advantageous location for an extensive location for an extensive flouring mill that can be found in Michigan unoccupied. The adaptability of this section to grain raising, and the superior quality of our grain are established facts; our natural location as a distributing mercantile center; our accessibility, and the close proximity of our fine harbor to the great marine thoroughfare, all combine to render Charlevoix a most desirable location for an enterprise of this nature.

Volume XVII

With this number the SENTINEL enters upon the seventeenth year of its life.

The sixteen years just left behind measure not only the life of the SENTINEL, but also that of the town in which it is published. Sixteen years ago, Charlevoix was not a village, even, and was too known outside of the narrow limits of the Grand Traverse region. The growth of the SENTINEL has run parallel with that of Charlevoix, and it is not saying too much when we assert that the growth of Charlevoix, and the region contiguous to it have been, in a great measure, the direct results of the SENTINEL'S labors.

Amid discouragements, and reverses, and drawbacks, the SENTINEL was always at the front, heralding to the world the [illegible] and possibilities of this favored region, and proclaiming the beauties of our "gem village of the North."

While there are some who seem disposed to forget the results of the SENTINEL'S labors away back when such results were the nucleus of all that has come since, we rejoice that the SENTINEL has hosts of friends who do not. And stoutly, we can safely say, the SENTINEL enjoys the confidence of the community in which it was born, and in which it has labored for so many years.

Its circulation is on a [illegible] and numerical status which laughs at the pretensions of its would-be rivals, and its patronage at the hands of business men affords it much encouragement, and a feeling of security for the future.

The SENTINEL has always been a part of Charlevoix and the Pine Lake region and what it has done is only a guarantee of what it is still capable of being and of what it will do.

We propose to keep the SENTINEL in the front. We have all the requisites with which to do it, and we assert, that in view of the SENTINEL'S work of sixteen years, we should receive the [illegible] encouragement of the people.

We're Sorry,

[illegible] this week [illegible] a misunderstanding on the part of our Chicago publishing house in sending our stock by freight instead of by express, this week.

—Attend the operetta.

—The Sec block is being repainted.

—Dan Rhodes will be on hand to clean chimneys the next ten days.

—Rev. J. F. Iddings will return in time to occupy his pulpit next Sunday.

—The resort dock is being removed preparatory to substituting a permanent and larger structure in the same location.

—A large quantity of lumber has been frozen in the ice in Lake Michigan within reach of Harbor Springs and quite a business has been done in hauling it to that place.

—Mr. T. E. Chamberlain has bought the meat market of Armstrong & Co. and will continue the business at the old stand. We are glad to number Mr. Chamberlain and family among our citizens.

—A town that supports a good newspaper is a good town. If you want to know anything about a place, send for a copy of its paper, and nine times out of ten if you receive a good paper it is a good town, if a poor paper a poor town. Every man who subscribes for his county paper makes an investment that will pay him more than ten times the amount. It works for you when you sleep, it speaks for you when your voice would never be heard. Are you a business man? it tells the people who you are and where to find you. A physician? it brings your name to the sick and afflicted. A lawyer? its readers know where to reach you in time of need. Whatever you are, or whatever your calling, it goes forth to help you, and help your neighbor, for there are no individual blessings; all is universal good or universal evil. Your home paper speaks not only your name at home, but in many distant homes for a paper, be it ever so poor, has more or less circulation abroad. Every family in the county should take one or more county papers. You cannot afford to build up a stranger to you and yours, at a sacrifice of your own interests.

ONE DARK NIGHT.

[illegible]

"You will find the Thursbys in great trouble," said Ralph Vernon, looking at her curiously.

"I know it," returned Eveline, coloring. "I have come from London to make up their mourning."

"Oh!" cried Ralph, a little surprised, for he had imagined that she was some poor relative, at least.

His manner was far more respectful than before, and Eveline felt so glad of his company that she soon brightened up, even laughing at the recollection of the tramp, as he crawled away on his hands and knees, and then suddenly sprang to his feet, flying off like the wind. It was too dark for Ralph to distinguish the girl's features plainly; but he could see that she was pretty, and that her figure was slight and graceful. Her voice, too, pleased him: it was so sweet and refined.

This little dressmaker was a lady in every sense of the word.

"Pray, take my arm," he said kindly, "I know you are very tired and upset by the fright that ruffian gave you."

"But you have the parcel to carry," returned Eveline, hesitatingly.

"I can manage you and the parcel," he told her with a laugh.

"You have never carried a parcel before in your life," observed Eveline, as she accepted his arm.

"How do you know that?" he asked, good-humoredly. "Well, if I have never made myself useful before, it is high time I began now."

They had left the lane, and were in the high road. Strange to say, the walk, which at the commencement seemed so intolerable to Eveline, now appeared marvellously short.

"I shall never see him again," she thought, with a faint sigh, as they parted at the gates of North Lodge, and it was with a very weary little face that she entered the presence of the lady of the house. He had told her that Mrs. Thursby was a very amiable woman, but still Eveline was agreeably surprised at the kindness of her reception. She had been to many houses on the same errand before, but nowhere had she been treated with such consideration.

SPRING.

[After Hood.]

Hail, Spring, thou gentle Spring!
The birds their songs of welcome sing;
(I told you once to shut that door!)
All nature hails thee with delight,
And seems to smile that thou art here;
The brightest things grow still more bright.
(Who'd think 'twould snow this time of year?)

I bid thee welcome once again,
When thee I greet I bless the day;
Cold winter now will not remain,
But in thy presence fade away.
The trees all bloom on the hillside nigh,
The grass grows greener on yonder knoll.
(I wish you'd go down town by and by
And order a ton of coal.)

Come with the fragrance of new-mown hay,
The bright green leaves we know you'll bring.
And the birds will carol a roundelay
To usher in the new-born spring.
How pleasant to feel spring's balmy breath,
And its many beauties to admire.
(Do you want me to sit here and freeze to death?
Why don't you go and shake down the fire?)

We know that thou wilt bring us joy;
The heliotrope and mignonette,
Roses and lilacs—(confound that boy!
Has he not brought that cough syrup yet?)
Come with the bright and sparkling dews,
And the sunbeams that make the violets sprout
(And bring me my ulster and overshoes—
It is freezing hard, and I'm going out).
—Puck.

THE TELEPHONE COMEDY.

How Crossed Wires Frequently Create Unpleasant Blunders.

The telephone is probably the only successful attempt ever made to reduce lying to a scientific system...

...fond husband pouring the wrong amour into his wife's ear has been happily caught by our lightning artist.

The following conversation starts at B:

Husband—Is that you, my dear?

Wife—Yes.

Husband—Are you alone?

Husband—Don't go. I'll be up at six o'clock. The old woman has got on to our racket the other night and is on her ear, and she's just sent word that she's going to her mother's to-night. It's clear spite. Do you catch on?

Wife—Certainly I do. Where does she think we went the other night?

Husband—Oh, she knows all about it. Somebody told her we were at the Fifth Avenue.

Wife—That's so. You'd laugh if you knew who it was.

Husband—H, it was some playing fool.

Wife—You are right again, my dear. What do you propose?

Husband—Meet me at Riccadonna's at seven. Champagne dinner. Then we'll go to Daly's. I'll get a box and we'll fool her this time. If we get into a box we're all right.

VANDERBILT'S WEALTH.

His fortune was at one time placed at as high as $200,000,000, but a good judge lately said that he thought $150,000,000 was now nearer the mark.

Still he is the richest man in the world.

None of the Rothschilds ever had anything like his wealth. The banking business of that famous house still, of course, goes on in London, Paris, and Vienna, but it is now in the hands of young men of the Rothschild family, and its wealth has been distributed among quite a number of its members by will, as one by one, the older men of the firm died. The combined capital of that family is now about $250,000,000, and some writers have declared that Mr. Vanderbilt's fortune exceeded that of all the Rothschilds put together, but this is an exaggeration. It would not be at all surprising if Mr. Vanderbilt's wealth should, before he departs this life, fully justify such a statement, but for the present it is enough to know that he comes as near as he does to the figures mentioned, and that he is not only far richer than any single member of the Rothschild family, but is, as already stated, the wealthiest man in the world. None of the traders of antiquity of which we have any record, none of the present financial barons of France or England, none of the monied princes of Germany, Austria or Russia, or of the world of haute finance anywhere, can really compare with him in point of personal possessions. Old John Jacob Astor with his fortune of $20,000,000 was, forty years ago, the Vanderbilt of his day, but even after making due allowances for the greater purchasing power of money in those times he came nowhere near the enormous accumulation of the chief millionaire of to-day.

The Labor Bureau.

The Michigan Bureau of Labor invites Michigan employes, male or female, over eighteen years of age, who are willing to answer the questions prepared by the Bureau, to send their addresses, plainly written on postal cards, to the Commissioner of Labor at Lansing. Blanks containing questions with a view to securing from wage-workers trustworthy information bearing upon the subject of labor in which they are personally interested will be sent to each address, together with stamped envelope for returning the blanks, when filled out, to the Bureau. By giving these questions prompt and careful attention, with full and free answers, a valuable service will be rendered to the wage-workers of Michigan and to the State. No names given to the Bureau will be made public.

Mr. Nasby's Experiences a Set-Back—The Enunciation of President Cleveland's Policy Regarding Negro Office-Holders.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

CONFEDRIT X ROADS,
(Wich is in the State uv Kentucky,)
April 21, 1885.

This world is a holler sham, and I wood be satisfied ef a catalysm ok kurred this minit wich wood wipe it out completely. Ef it isn't one thing it is suthin else.

President Cleveland announst last week that wher niggers wuz in offis in the South he shood remove em if they hed bin dishonest, but he shood not appoint white men in their places, but rather give the posishens to sich niggers ez hed demonstrated ther honesty and ... by supportin him.

Joe Bigler seed it afore I did, for I wuz out in the kentry when the paper come, and he immejitly went with it over to Bascom's and red it to George W. The trend remarkt to Issaker Gavitt and Deekin Pogram, wich wuz sittin ther, that this commishinin woodent affect them, ez the places they wuz after wuz filled with waite men, and white men wood be appinted when they wuz removed, but he continyood:

"This cooks the Parson's goose. The post offis here is filled by a nigger, Lubbock. Lubbock hez bin honest enuff ez fur ez we kin see, but he votid fur Blaine, which is prima facie evidence that he isn't fit fur the posishen. He will be removed ez a matter uv course, but his place will be filled, accordin to the President, with a Dimocratic nigger. Ez ther ain't but one sich, Andrew Jaxon Pogram, uv course he will be the man. Deekin, I congratoolate yoo. Yoo may never hold a Fedrel offis yourself, but one with your blood in his vanes will."

The feend hed jist got thru with this oraslun when I entered, and steppin briskly up to the bar sed "ez yoosual, G. W."

...curiosity to see in what manner he would pay his debt to them. All of his appointments had been of Democrats of the straightest sort. It pleased the mugwumps all at once to make a point in favor of the retention of Pearson. With singular unanimity they joined from all over the country in making it plain to him that the New York post-office given to Pearson for another term would square obligations between them, and at the same time be accepted by them as a signal proof of his adherence to their favorite hobby. Cleveland saw his opportunity and paid his debt. There is no doubt whatever that he took that view of the matter. If he had not felt under obligations to the mugwumps, and had every reason to believe that the course he adopted would discharge them, Mr. Pearson would not have been reappointed. It is well known that other considerations reenforced the mugwumps' demand; but by themselves they would not have been weighty enough to prevent the office from going into control of a good Democrat.

Mr. Cleveland is in no great hurry, but his course so far shows that, proceeding with deliberation, he will remove all Republican office-holders above the graded service and fill their places with Democrats. If this is not so does any one suppose that such men as Clarke, Crowell, Chesley, and many others whose heads have fallen, would have been supplanted by men who can not possibly fill their places with equal efficiency until years spent in office shall have made them equally acquainted with the duties incident to their positions? Efficiency, honesty and fidelity in the discharge of official duties are qualities that Mr. Cleveland no doubt appreciates, but no act of his indicate that they will operate to prevent the removal of Republicans to make way for Democrats, unless, as in Pearson's case, there is a point to be made growing out of political obligations incurred in the past. Furthermore, we have proof from his alleged admissions, as published in the Sunday Herald, that the motive that governed...

FARRIERY.

Mr. Bonner Gives a Lesson on Horseflesh.

"Now," said Mr. Bonner, "we will begin with her hind feet. You observe that only the imprint of her toes are visible. The heels scarcely touch the ground. She is literally walking on her toes. That arises from two causes. First, the anterior part of the hoof is too long and the heels are too low. Her foot in front is what Dr. Roberge and I term the 'wheel-shaped hoof.' It is too convex. That throws [illegible] of the coffin bone too close to the interior journals of the lower coronal bone, and destroys at least one half of the articulation of the coffin joint. The hoof must be foreshortened, and when she is shod the heels must be raised by a medium heel calkin. But this is not all. On the off hind foot she has been more or less lame for years. That arises from an excess of growth on the inside branch of the hoof, which must be pared down to a level with the outside branch.

"The abnormal shape of three of the feet of Maud S. arises from the fact that they grow more rapidly on the inside than on the outside branches. This is observed in both hind hoofs and the near fore hoof. While her hind feet are too much wheel-shaped, meaning convex, her front feet are too much bent, meaning concave, in the anterior part of the wall. These malformations directly interfere with the articulation of the coffin bone. For instance, the heels of the hind feet are too low, while the toes require foreshortening, and the heels of the front feet are too high, which necessitates their material reduction. This state of her feet has arisen from injudicious paring. She was foaled with perfect feet; now they are misshapen from mismanagement. Moreover, the articulation of the coffin joints in all four feet is not only seriously injured, but, by reason of the excessive toes in front, her forward stride has been materially lessened. This made the use of toe-weights more imperative. At Lexington her front shoes weighed fourteen ounces, and her toe-weights [illegible]

The First Thousand Dollars.

It looks like our folks never will get rich. Somehow or other they can't make the first $1,000. If they make it they can't save it. An Irishman was asked how he managed to get so rich, and he said he never bought anything that he was not obliged to have. That is the way we do it at our house, and most everybody else that I know of. We have got rich folks' ways with a poor man's purse, and so we live on a strain. It is a curious circumstance in this life, that the folks who would be most liberal and charitable with their money haven't got any surplus to give away. Their very habits of free living and generosity keep them from accumulating.

There are 500 rich men up North to one down here. They begin early to save and economize. They take care of the littles, and before long they have the first thousand clear, and then they are safe. Our folks begin early to keep up with society and the fashions, and never get the thousand that is the mudsill, the foundation of wealth.—Bill Arp.

The Fountain of Youth.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food; gases are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy, weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS. Take no others. Sold by O. B. CONSUMERS --OF-- FLOUR.

It is a fact that Flour made by the ROLLER PROCESS from Grand Traverse Wheat, will make A LARGE PERCENTAGE MORE BREAD to the barrel than Flour which is EQUALLY WHITE, made from ILLINOIS and WISCONSIN Spring wheat which is almost universally No. 2 or rejected, very little No. 1 wheat being ground in either of these states.

WE PARTICULARLY CALL ATTENTION to our FAMILY BRAND made ENTIRELY OF GRAND TRAVERSE WHEAT by the ROLLER PROCESS, to be had of J. L. HURD & CO., CHARLEVOIX and of any other responsible dealer at other points in ¼, ½, or ⅛ Bbl. Sacks, as low as any Flour of equal whiteness in the market. Try it and you will be convinced that the above is a fact. Prices quoted to dealers upon application to—

WOMEN AND ANIMALS.

The Former Are Better Friends to the Latter Than Men Are.

Mr. Charles H. Hankinson, superintendent of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals said the other day: "The only legal contest we have now is the legacy of Miss Wilton, of $200,000. Her uncle is contesting the will on the ground of her alleged insanity. There is no doubt, I think that we will get the money. She used to come to the office many a time and talk to me. She used to report lame and unblanketed horses. The society takes cognizance of unblanketed horses, and our officers would accompany her to the places where the law had been violated. She used also to report cases of sick dogs and cats, and of old canary birds. She left the legacy because of her love for animals.

"An old German woman, living in Rivington street, often comes to us with sick cats. She gathers up all the destitute tabbies she can find and brings them to us. Yet once when accosted by a beggar in front of our office she became very indignant and refused to help that human being. She will carry a dog or a cat to our office on any day, even if it is troubled with mange. Some people like cats and dogs; others would come three miles to inform us where there is a lame horse. A tramp dog won't follow a man, but some women who are out shopping will get the animal to follow them to our office. A French woman in Bleecker street has a partiality for cats. An Englishwoman up-town has a partiality for birds. If she finds any suffering with cold she will tell us of it, and if we find the complaint to be well founded we clean the cage or remove the bird from any chance of overcrowding."

"Do you think that a bird bred in a cage desires freedom?"

"No. I have a bird of my own that will go out of an open window and chirp and come back. I don't think that the eagles at Central park suffer imprisonment. They might at first, but do not now. When a man has received a large consignment of canary birds, we often send an officer down to him, and he has them transferred into a large cage.

"About vivisection, the persons who are authorized to vivisect animals are only professors in medical colleges. If a medical student vivisects an animal in his own room he is liable to imprisonment."

"Does an animal suffer as much as a human being?"

"Yes; fully as much under similar circumstances. A bulldog is one of the ugliest tempered of animals. One was run over a short time ago and was brought into our office. We have a colored man who can control any dog by his kindness. The bulldog allowed the man to dress his limbs, and it showed by signs just where it was in pain."

"What animal has the highest intelligence?"

"That is hard to say. Some say horses, others dogs, others cats. Take trained dogs. Well, most of them are curs. Trainers cannot train a full-blooded dog. I've had curs brought into the office that would resent kindness.

"We take all sorts of chances. We hear that seventeen or eighteen horses are starving. Instead of going to court and getting a warrant we go straight to the stable. If we find the story correct the owner is liable as a witness. The foreman is liable to imprisonment for cruelty. Cruelty to animals as a pastime is essentially demoralizing. In dog fights that I have raided I have arrested boys who have stolen from their mothers in order to get money to bet. If the betting was prohibited by law, then cruelty to animals would be diminished. If a horse is overdriven at races, and we find that he shows evidences of being overdriven, we make arrests.

"Mr. Bonner is in sympathy with the society, but he objects to our objection to clipping horses. We think that horses should not be clipped at the beginning of the cold weather. Docking horses' tails we object to, because the process causes great pain and deprives the animal of its natural protection against flies. It is only a matter of fashion. If it were a fashion to have long tails and long manes and no check-reins, the fashion would be followed. There is no special law against check-reins. But the courts always uphold us in considering them as a means of torture. We object to spurs only when a man shows that he doesn't know how to use them. If there is any evidence of his unnecessarily digging the horse we arrest him. I think in time spurs will be entirely done away with.

"The horse is more abused than any other animal. The most common abuse is the galling of a sore. There is no objection to his working if the wound is properly protected. Then we have lame horses. Those are the most difficult cases to treat. We have no trouble as to the honesty of our agents. They have the power of arrest for any offense committed in their presence. Any other citizen has the same right. We handle, on the average, about seventy-five cases a day. Men are not as active as women in informing our society about abuses of animals. The aggregate amount of money left to the society by women is larger than men. The question of comparative cruelty of the two sexes is a delicate one. I have known women who have been mighty kind to animals and very cruel to their husbands.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

GLEANINGS.

It is not very generally known that Queen Victoria was once called Queen Alexandrina Victoria, and that the oaths of allegiance were in that name.

Ten million pounds of glass bottles, or 7,000,200 individual bottles, were ordered from Philadelphia manufacturers by a New York State medicine firm a few days ago.

It is more than suspected that very many of the snake bites causing death in India are caused by parents desiring to put an end to superfluous offspring in a manner which defies discovery of guilt.

It is said that Congressman Phil Thompson, when a prosecuting attorney in Kentucky, once asked his twin brother to try a case for him. He did so, and the court did not know the difference.

Mrs. L. E. Pritchard, of Newburyport, has collected 500,000 canceled postage stamps. She desires to obtain 1,000,000, and with the aid of volunteer contributions from many friends seems to have a prospect of success.

In a clinical lecture delivered recently Dr. Bartholomew said that, "as a rule, the criminal classes have an imperfect ear development, especially hereditary criminals. A full, distinct, well-developed lobe indicates high mental development.

Prof. W. J. Rolfe believes in the probability of Shakspeare having visited Italy. The atmosphere of many plays is thoroughly Italian. Portia says: "This night, methinks, is but the daylight sick, it looks a little paler." No such moonlight was ever seen in England.

Speaking of the malleolousness of the mocking-bird, a writer states that if young birds are placed in cages where the parent birds can have access to them they will feed their offspring regularly for two or three days, and then, as if in despair, will poison them, giving them the berry of the black ash.

A gentleman of this place several years ago accidentally threw a highly-prized piece of money into the spouting of one of our highest buildings. Not long ago, while he was standing beneath the spouting, an English sparrow dropped the coin from its mouth, letting it fall at his feet.—Union Bridge (Md.) Era.

A French scientist has been studying the effects of altitude upon vegetation, and concludes that for each augmentation of about 100 yards there will be, as a general average, a retardation of four days; that is, other circumstances being equal, a crop planted at the sea level will appear above ground four days before a similar crop planted 300 feet above it.

Mr Joseph Wilson Swan, the electric-light inventor, is described as a tall, handsome, north of England man, of more than middle age, with a Jove-like cast of head waving with long gray locks, and a pair of penetrating eyes gleaming from beneath bushy gray brows. His house, Lauriston, at Bromley, England, is probably more completely equipped with electric devices than any other in the world.

I wish, says the San Francisco News Letter, some one would suggest some way by which Eastern people who have made a brief visit to us could be informed for good that no one here ever dreams of using the word "Frisco." We are fond of nick-names, of pet names and of slummy "cuss" words, but we have never been familiar with the name of our city. It is the surest test of a person's alienship when he flings at us, as a grateful compliment, the word Frisco.

In preparing the rich dish of terrapin Baltimoreans take live terrapins and let them swim about in cold water until they are perfectly clean. The terrapins are then plunged into boiling water and boiled until the shells are loosened. They are taken out of the water and removed from the shells, when they are stewed with a mixture of hard boiled egg, cream, butter, madeira wine, flour, salt and other condiments, and a dish fit for a congressman is served.—Baltimore American.

Wisconsin is agitated because people can marry too easily in that state, and is proposing to enact a law requiring a license for entering into the bonds. Rhode Island is disturbed because people can unmarry too easily in that state, and the legislature is asked to impose restrictions on divorce. While human nature remains unimproved, there will be more or less trouble in the world over these two difficulties, but Rhode Island has the easier job on hand in this instance.—Utica Herald.

This year will bring with it the golden jubilee of Pope Leo's priesthood, which he received in 1835. It has been already decided in Italy to celebrate it by a league of prayers for the triumph of the church, and the prolongation of His Holiness' life; by an exhibition at the Vatican of all the offerings which will be made, specially of objects relating to public worship; by an alms for the mass, made up of offerings from the entire Catholic world; and fourthly, by a pilgrimage to the tombs of the Apostles.

There is a man in Brooklyn who is known all over the city as the personification of ugliness. People point at him in the street and say: "There goes the homeliest man in Brooklyn." What makes him partly a subject of popular remark is that he is said to consider himself specially favored with personal beauty. Once in two weeks, it is said, he calls on his physician, struts up and down before the latter's large mirror, and, turning from the mirror to the physician, anxiously inquires if there is anything to mar his usually pleasing appearance.—New York Commercial.

To oxidize jewelry an expeditious and durable process is to dissolve grammes of sulphuret of potassium in a liter of hot water. As soon as the sulphuret is dissolved, dip the silver articles into the mixture; they are sufficiently oxidized in the course of a few seconds. The mixture must be used as soon as possible, as it loses its oxidizing power by chemical action [illegible] length of time. [illegible] silver articles should then be plunged into fresh water and thoroughly cleaned and dried, then brushed and polished with a wire brush and some powdered graphite, which makes the color darker. If the articles are ornamented with gold figures, the brush used should be what is called a rouge brush. Silver vases and jewelry oxidized in this manner will prove very handsome and durable.

Hitherto, in every Canadian history, French or English, we have been told that the word "Quebec" was Indian, meaning strait, or promontory, while others have imagined that it is a corruption of "Quel bec!" (what a beak!) Here is something quite new and quite new: Mr. Henry Chapman, an English antiquary, writes: "I have an idea that it is Briquebec, in Normandy, about six and one-half leagues from Cherbourg, which gave the name to Quebec. The chateau of Briquebec was granted by Henry V., King of England, France and Normandy, to William de la Pole, Duke of Suffolk, and on his seal he calls himself Comes de Quebec. This was in 1420, seventy-two years before the discovery of America. Hence it is probable that Briquebec was formerly called Quebec also. The seal is in the possession of the Duke of Buckingham, and is in the library of Stowe."—Montreal (Canada) Gazette.

THE OLD SONG.

The minstrel of the classic lay
Of love and wine who sings
Still found the fingers run astray
That touched the rebel strings.

Of Cadmus he would fain have sung,
Of Atreus and his line;
But all the jocund echoes rung
With songs of love and wine.

Ah, brothers! I would fain have caught
Some fresher fancy's gleam;
My truant accents find, unsought,
The old familiar theme.

Love, Love! but not the sportive child
With shaft and twanging bow,
Whose random arrows drove us wild
Some threescore years ago;

Not Eros, with his joyous laugh,
The urchin blind and bare,
But Love, with spectacles and staff,
And scanty, silvered hair.

Our heads with frosted locks are white,
Our roofs are thatched with snow,
But red, in chilling winter's spite,
Our hearts and hearthstones glow.

Our old acquaintance, Time, drops in,
And while the running sands
Their golden thread unheeded spin,
He warms his frozen hands.

THE LOST BRACELET;

Or: A Bachelor's Expedient, and What Came of It.

Enter Cranston, announcing Mr. Lowell.

Mrs. V. (starting. Aside). The man opposite!

Mr. L. (advancing). Madam, I believe I have been fortunate enough to find your bracelet.

Mrs. V. Sir, I asked my servant to look at it and to give——

Mr. L. She wished to carry out your orders; but of course I could not think of accepting a reward.

Mrs. V. Then may I ask why—— [Hesitates.]

Mr. L. Why I asked to see you? I suppose I must confess that, after all, I am covetous enough to desire a reward—that of witnessing your pleasure at recovering your bracelet.

Mrs. V. You are very kind. Don't delay the pleasure on my account.

Mr. L. (taking bracelet wrapped in jeweller's paper from his pocket). This, I believe, is it.

Mrs. V. (takes package, opens it, and at first glance gives a little scream of joy). Yes, that's it. O, I'm so glad!

Mr. L. (aside.) I begin to breathe again.

Mrs. V. (looking at bracelet more carefully). But yet it looks different. There were some scratches on mine just here. [Pointing to clasp.]

Mr. L. (aside). I never thought of that. What can I say? [Aloud.] The fact is, madam, that when I was fortunate enough to find your bracelet lying in the road, it was covered with mud. I took the liberty of having it cleaned before returning it, and I presume the jeweller must have taken out the scratches. [Aside.] That was a happy thought.

Mrs. V. I am sorry you have had so much trouble. You will at least allow me to repay——

It seems to rain bracelets. I wish some 'd come my way. [Exit.

Mrs. V. Now, sir, I'll trouble you for an explanation.

Mr. L. An explanation? O, about the bracelet. Are you quite sure there is no mistake?

Mrs. V. There seems to have been a very grave one. Well, sir, your explanation?

Mr. L. Mrs. Vaughan, I will make a clean breast of it, and throw myself on your generosity for forgiveness. I ventured to intimate before that for months I have silently admired you, and longed above all things to make your acquaintance. I inquired diligently among all my friends for some one who knew you, so that I might be properly introduced. I could not succeed. This morning I read your advertisement. I knew how infrequently lost things were recovered. It occurred to me that perhaps your bracelet was of a pattern which had been duplicated. I went to the jewelers and found that it was so; but even if I could not have got one exactly like, I should have used another as a pretext for gaining speech with you. I acknowledge my fault, but you ought to allow for the greatness of the temptation.

Mrs. V. (with indignation that is more than half assumed). So, sir, according to your own statement, you take advantage of my misfortune to intrude upon my solitude and my grief. Not content with dogging my steps when I drove out, you sit at your window, and keep an almost incessant watch on my house.

Mr. L. I beg your pardon. How do you know that I watch from my window?

Mrs. V. Didn't you tell me so awhile ago?

Mr. L. No; I said nothing about the window.

Mrs. V. ... I remember now; it was my ...

A FAST MAIL.

The Experience of an Austin (Tex.) Gentleman in Posting a Letter.

Colonel Yerger, of Austin, had just finished writing a letter. It was very important that it should go off by the next mail, so he rang the bell, and upon the colored servant, Matilda, appearing, he handed her the letter, saying:

"Take this letter to the letter box on the corner as fast as you can. It is very important."

Matilda, the colored girl, went out with the letter, and meeting the coachman, handed it to him, remarking:

"Jess you take dis hear letter to do letter box."

The coachman started out with the letter. He happened to see a friend passing, and it occurred to him that he might save himself the trouble, so he handed his friend the letter, requesting him to post it without delay, as it was very important. That night the coachman's friend, just before retiring, made the discovery that he had forgotten to post the letter, so he gave it to one of the boys at the stable, enjoining him to put it in the letter box early next morning.

The stable boy was about to comply with the request next morning, when a baker, with whom he was acquainted, ...

PIP! POP! FLIPPERTY FLOP!

Song of the Corn Popper.

Pip! pop! flipperty flop!
Here am I, all ready to pop
...
Hop away! pop away! here we go!

Pip! pop! flipperty flop!
Into the bowl the kernels drop
Sharp and hard and yellow and small,
Must say they don't look good at all!
But wait till they burst into warm white snow!
Hop away! pop away! here we go!

Pip! pop! flipperty flop!
Don't fill me too full, shut down the top!
Rake out the coals in an even bed,
Topaz yellow and ruby red
Shade your eyes from the fiery glow,
Hop away! pop away! here we go!

Pip! pop! flipperty flop!
Shake me steadily, do not stop!
Backward and forward, not up and down;
Don't let me drop or you'll burn it brown.
Never too high and never too low,
Hop away! pop away! here we go!

Pip! pop! flipperty flop!
Now they are singing, and soon they'll hop.
Hi! the kernels begin to swell.
Ho! at last they are dancing well.
Puffs and fluffs of feathery snow,
Hop away! pop away! here we go!

Pip! pop! flipperty flop!
All full, little ones! Time to stop!
Pour out the snowy, feathery mass
Here is a treat for lad and lass.
Open your mouths now, all in a row,
Munch away! crunch away! here we go!

HOW BENNY RAN AWAY.

and he had often gone up in the stall beside them and laid down. It would have been much warmer than on the mow that night, but those were strange horses and one of them kicked at him that night as he passed through the stable, so Benny dared not attempt to get very near.

He came down from the mow all covered with snow the next morning. A pail of milk was standing on the barn floor, where the farmer had left it for a few minutes while he gave the cattle some fodder.

Benny stole a drink, and hurried away.

He was much discouraged; he was so hungry, he was just starving, he thought; he had frozen one ear the night before and he did not seem to get "down South," where it was "always warm." It had grown colder ever since he started from the doctor's.

The result of his meditations you will see when I tell you that just one week from the time he ran away he was seen to walk up the gravel path leading to Dr. Grey's sitting room door.

He was ashamed to go in. What would Charlie say; he looked worse than he ever did before?

He sat on the step for a minute or two and then began to cry piteously. The doctor himself opened the door. "Oh! ho!" was all he said as Benny walked past him into the house. Charlie ...

THE HUMAN MOSQUITO.

A Creature Which Exists But to Torment.

How He Wounds and Tortures his Hapless Victims—The Different Varieties of the Species—A Possible Reason for his Existence.

He is ubiquitous and, taking him morally, he has solved the problem of perpetual motion for he is never quiet, never tranquil, and as for letting well or his fellow creatures alone, he does that as little as he pays the national debt. Like his entomological prototype, the human mosquito has various ...

... quito, turns against you, when you have done all for him that he desired and when he has no more hope of your help. Then you learn the true quality of his nature, and find out for yourself of what base material it is made. It is only after repeated trials, however, that he is convinced of your limits in the way of help for he is of the same genus as the daughter of the horseleech, and cries ever "Give! give!" When you have once allowed a man or woman of this kind to prove that you are puncturable, that you are so much nutriment for bold suckers, you are done for; and nothing short of a lawyer will free you from attacks which, made at first insidiously may be with flatteries, mute appeals, humble representations, gentle prayers, grow by time and success into bold and burglarious assaults, accompanied with threats and enforced by moral bludgeons. Then you must address yourself to the law, which is to the human mosquito of determined attack what petroleum is said to be to his winged prototype, the only effectual defense known. To do good to a man or woman of this kind is to illustrate the truth of the hard old Cornish saying: "Save a man from the sea, and he becomes your enemy." To sow golden grain on the barren fields of such a one is to reap sorrow for yourself, and to give your coat is but the preface to the demand for your cloak. Your inch ever becomes his ell; and when you do not concede all that is demanded, then are you stung, as a kind of waymark between what you have done and what you have not.

At home the human mosquito is restless and exacting. He interferes in everything ... and always adds a drop of bitterness to such honey as the family may have garnered in its hive. Is there a fete day on hand? He takes out the sweetness, rubs off the gloss, by restrictions if he be in the place of command, by temper if he be a subordinate who can only damage and not destroy. As the former, he harrasses his wife by finding fault with her arrangements, substituting his own, he annoys the servants by contradictory commands; irritates the governess by doubting her capacity for taking care of her charge; and causes the children to weep or to sulk according to their natures, by scolding them impartially all round, with reason or without. ...

May God be near thee, friend,
When we are far away;
May His smile cheer thee, friend,
And make all light as day;
Look up! the sky, the stars above
Will whisper to thee of His changeless love.

In distant desert places
The "Mounts of God" are found;
His sky the world embraces,
And makes it "holy ground;"
The heart that serves, and loves, and clings,
Hears everywhere the rush of angel wings.

To God the "there" is "here;"
All spaces are His own;
The distant and the near
Are shadows of His throne;
All times are His, the new, the old—
What boots it where life's little tale is told?

'Tis not for us to choose;
We listen and obey;
'Tis His to call and use;
'Tis ours to serve and pray;
It matters little, here or there,
God's world is wide, and Heaven is everywhere.

We can not go so far
That home is out of sight;
The morn, the evening star,
Will say "Good day!" "Good night!"
The heart that loves will never be alone;
All earth, all Heaven, it reckons as its own!

A SONG OF SPRING.

The sun that through the winter days
Was staying where the orange grows
Returns again with genial rays,
That dissipate slow, straggling snows.

I strolled among the meadows, where
The green its first appearance makes;
Rejoicing, that without a care,
The dainty violet awakes.

The glow of sunshine; balmy air;
The blue sky brightly arching o'er;
All make me think, ere we're aware
The Spring will gladden us once more.

Upstreet I saw, through many a tear,
The monkey bring again to view
The old hand organ that each year
Its dreaded curse will renew.

I more than saw: the beast so true
Had brought a man without a fear,
Who tortured all that could not flee;
And can I doubt that Spring is here?

I hastened further on to where
The crowd a circle made around
A mangled body lying there,
Disfigured o'er with wound on wound.

Amazed, I could not understand
Why no one pitied, 'till I spied
The long fair hair, pale face and hand
That grasped a roll with ribbon tied.

More eloquent than words it taught
The story of where he had been,
How he, with Verse of Welcome, sought
The editor and found him in.

Up by the shattered window stood
The editor who smiled, while some Bystanders approved as best they could;
And now I'm sure that Spring has come.

THE MADNESS OF MUSIC.

Its Effect on the Central Molecule, and Dr. Selsam's Cure.

On the evening of the 19th of September, 1855, I made a call upon my old university friend, the illustrious Dr. Adrien Selsam, professor of general pathology, chief of clinics, family physician to the Grand Duchess, etc., etc. I found him alone in his magnificent apartments on the Bergstrasse. His elbow was resting on a small black marble table, while his eyes were plunged ...

He struck the head, which gave back a hollow sound, as though it were made of wood. I was shocked, even though Selsam's words reassured me somewhat.

"Ah, then is not annihilated," thought I; "so much the better. I prefer to live in detail rather than not live at all."

"Yes," cried Selsam, who seemed to read in my face the thoughts which passed through my mind; "yes, man is immortal in detail; each of the molecules of which he is composed is imperishable; these live always and forever! But their lives, their sufferings are transmitted to the soul which governs them, consults their needs, and holds them subject to will. We have sought the highest type of government; we presume to have found it in a hive of bees, in an ant hill; the ideal model of government is — there."

Thereupon he plunged his scalpel into the corpse and opened it completely. I drew back from it with horror, but he, appearing not to have observed the movement, calmly continued.

"Let us first observe the mode of action and transmission of the soul. You see these thousands of white fibers which branch out all over the body; they are the nerves, the highways of this vast country, wherein incessantly come and go, quicker than lightning, dispatches carrying to the extremities the orders of the central molecule, or warning of one of the necessities and dangers which affect or threaten its innumerable subjects. Thus all move, all act, all tend to the one end assigned by the soul. Nevertheless, each molecule has its own task and individual nature; thus here are the respiratory organs, the lungs; here are those by which the blood is circulated, the heart, veins and arteries; here those of the digestion, the stomach, the intestines. Do not imagine that they are composed of the same elements, the same beings. By no means. When decomposition takes place, the lungs produce that class of insects called douves, or gourd-worms, who fasten themselves on like the leech; their bodies are long and filiform. The intestines produce the lombric, or loin-worm, formed of healthy rings; they are cylindrical, of a red color, thin at the extremities, and in no particular do they resemble the gourd-worms. The heart produces yet another variety, and so on with each organ. The living being is a whole universe subject to a single will. And rest assured that each of these infinitesimal creatures has an immortal soul. The Supreme Being shows no preference in the gift of immortality, because, from the smallest atom to incommensurable space, all are subject to absolute justice; there is never a molecule out of the sphere assigned to its capacity.

"But where, then, is liberty?" I exclaimed. "If I am an enslaved molecule, how can I be responsible for my actions?"

"Liberty is intact," replied Selsam, "for the molecule of my flesh can revolt against ...

"FROZEN FACTS" is a purely American expression, and one, too, of recent origin. It has the merit of attracting attention, and also seems to bear conviction of truthfulness on its face. We make room in our issue of to-day, for a fact of this character. A correspondent, Henry Whiting, Esq., of Boston, Mass., says: "Dr. R. V. We believe it to be a fact, whether "frozen" or otherwise, that America needs more men like Mr. Whiting; men who act, men who investigate truths, and seize opportunities.

SELF-PRESERVATION THE FIRST LAW OF NATURE.

In these degenerate days when ennui or a morbid craving for excitement alternately depresses or enlivens the animal pulse of unfortunate humanity, a word, a blow, a pistol shot, too often ends the chapter of life and darkens with gloom and sorrowing regret a murderer's future. Truly "self-preservation is the first law of nature," but this in its fullest and grandest sense should include a preservation of one's equanimity of temper, a preservation of a happy consciousness of living and doing rightly, a preservation of that disposition which shows a regard for the lives and feelings of others, all of which makes life endurable to our associates and enjoyable to ourselves. Again, a knowledge of that which promotes and that which impairs the harmonious action of natural bodily functions is essential to the best preservation of all there is in life worth living. To this end a judicious selection of remedial agents should unerringly be made when the wheels of perfect health begin to run slow, when the stomach grows weak, when the liver is sluggish, when the kidneys give pain, when natural functions cause distress, and gloomy forebodings become constant companions. The wisest selection of a medicine for counteracting such evidences of ill health and restoring robust strength to all parts of the body is DR. GUYSOTT'S YELLOW DOCK AND SARSAPARILLA. Remember this and do not let your druggists sell you in its place anything of a different name, for the writer, who was himself an invalid for years, knows this remedy to excel as a health restorative all other preparations.

She has been under the treatment of the doctor for six years. Finally he said he could do nothing more for her, that she would die in 24 hours. Then I commenced using your Compound, as soon as she commenced to take it she commenced getting better and now she can attend to her domestic affairs as well as she ever could."

Bismarck's Size and Voice.

Every political gourmet must enjoy hearing Prince Bismarck speak. He is no elegant orator; rather the contrary, but he can lead a debate like no one else. Only a few days ago he spoke seven times in one afternoon, each time with more energy and spirit, proving that his health is indeed restored. Suddenly soft bells are heard in all parts of the house. The electric bells in the reading room, in the committee rooms, the journalists' room are sounded to announce the arrival of the chancellor, who has shown that he will speak presently, for with one of his pencils, more than a foot long, he has noted down something on the loose quarto sheets before him, with letters not more than an inch deep, and this is a safe sign that he intends speaking. The president bows to him, and Prince Bismarck rises to "take the word." He is certainly more than six feet high, over his powerful chest and broad shoulders rises a strangely rounded, well-shaped head of enormous dimensions, and with no hair upon it, so that it looks like a dome of polished ivory. Thick white brows hang over his eyes like two icicles. These brows give his face a dark and frowning expression, and the look which glistens in his eyes is cold and somewhat cruel—at least in parliament. His moustache is also thick and gray, and conceals the mouth entirely, the whole face is covered with folds and wrinkles, broad rings surround his eyes and even his temples are covered with small wrinkles. When he begins to speak the color of his face changes from pale to red, and gradually assumes a light bronze shade, which gives his powerful skull the appearance of polished metal.

It is a surprise to hear Bismarck speak for the first time. The soft, almost weak, voice is out of all proportion with his gigantic frame. It sometimes becomes so soft that we fear it will die out altogether, and when he has spoken for a while it grows hoarse. The chancellor sometimes speaks very fast, sometimes very slowly, but never in a loud tone. He has no pathos whatever. Personal attacks upon his enemies are spoken by Bismarck with ironical politeness, and in such an ... [illegible] ... —Zurich Paper Translation in London News.

Of the whole population of the globe a person dies every day, or more than one each second.

Large numbers of people, many of them old soldiers, are now making pilgrimages to the site of Andersonville prison. A veteran recalls the scene at the hanging of six prisoners by their comrades after they had tried them by court martial in the stockade. "The same rope," he says, "was used for them all, but it broke with the last man. He struck the ground unhurt, and, springing up, ran around the prison with the rope dangling from his neck, and all the crowd of prisoners after him. They caught him and led him back to the gallows, got a new rope and hanged him."

A Great Discovery.

Mr. Wm. Thomas, of Newton, Ia., says: "My wife has been seriously affected with a cough for twenty-five years, and this spring more severely than ever before. She had used many remedies without relief, and being urged to try Dr. King's New Discovery, did so, with most gratifying results. The first bottle relieved her very much, and the second bottle has absolutely cured her. She has not had so good health for thirty years." Trial Bottles Free at Weed & Co.'s Drug Store. Large size $1.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow, you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return, pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Weed & Co.

The Fountain of Youth.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food, gases are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and distress until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy, weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS. Take no others. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co., and G. W. Crouter.

A Woman's Philanthropy.

Mrs. Alice N. Lincoln is one of the most energetic, practical and business-like women in Boston. She is also one of the wealthiest. She has a magnificent home on Commonwealth avenue, and possesses an income of about $12,000 a year. She has always taken a great interest in sanitary matters, and since the newspapers began their crusade against filthy tenements she has been running tenement houses in the worst parts of the city. The places were about to be vacated by the Board of Health on account of their unhealthy condition, when Mrs. Lincoln rented them, made needed repairs and improvements, and let the apartments to respectable people. While in one sense the work is a benevolence, she conducts her houses on strict business principles, visiting them frequently and making all the rent collections herself. Thus far she has come out with a fair profit. The scheme is now a hobby with her, and she is bargaining for the notorious "Crystal Palace," a very ancient and filthy barracks in the South Cove, where thieves, hoodlums and debauches make their headquarters.

A Father's Ruse.

Not far distant from Toccoa lives an old man whose name is Jeffrey Beck. Mr. Beck's good wife died some time last summer. The disconsolate widower is the father of a son who is known as Jesse Beck. Once upon a time Jesse became dissatisfied with a life of single blessedness, and forthwith made search for a partner for life. Jesse found a girl that suited him, and was accepted by the lady on the spot.

She was supposed to be, as we learn, a Miss Pitts. Jesse made too much delay in making arrangements for the marriage to suit Miss Pitts; so she sent her lover a message, about as follows: "If you want to marry me you had better have it attended to immediately, if not sooner."

This completely destroyed Jesse's peace of mind, so he went to the old man Jeff for advice. Now, Jesse fears neither storm, rain, nor tempest, and seldom wears a coat even in the coldest of weather. It happened that Jesse at ... [illegible]

Interesting News Compilation.

FROM WASHINGTON.

On the 1st the President appointed E. J. Hale, of North Carolina, to be United States Consul at Manchester, Eng., vice A. H. Shaw; John Goode, of Virginia, to be Solicitor-General, vice Samuel F. Phillips, resigned; and William M. Merrick, of Maryland, to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, vice Andrew Wylie, resigned. J. B. Baird, of Georgia, was appointed Superintendent at the Dead-Letter Office.

The public-debt statement (old form) for April is as follows: Total debt (including [illegible]) $1,88[illegible]; cash in Treasury [illegible]; debt, less amount in Treasury, $1,[illegible]. Decrease during April, $[illegible]. Decrease since April 30, 1884, $[illegible].

Nearly one hundred clerks commenced on the 1st to count the moneys and securities in the United States Treasury at Washington, and it was not expected that they would complete the work before the 15th inst.

There were 197 business failures in the United States and Canada during the seven days ended on the 1st, against 2[illegible] the previous seven days. The distribution was as follows: Middle States 47; New England States, [illegible]; Western, [illegible]; Southern, [illegible]; Pacific States and Territories, 18; Canada [illegible].

At twenty-six leading clearing-houses in the United States the exchanges during the week ended on the 2d aggregated $[illegible] against $[illegible] the previous week. As compared with the corresponding period of 1884, the falling off amounts to [illegible] per cent.

In the United States and Canada the fire losses for April aggregated $[illegible], and for the four months of 1885 $[illegible], or at the rate of over $[illegible] for the year. This increase was said to be out of proportion to the advanced value of property.

On the 4th the President and most of the members of his Cabinet accompanied the veterans of the Army of the Potomac on their annual visit to the battlefield of Gettysburg and were received with a salute of artillery.

The other night masked thieves entered the house of James Cogans, an old Irish farmer, at Passo Station, six miles from Wheeling, W. Va., and after gagging and torturing Cogans and his aged wife, ascertained the whereabouts of $1,3[illegible] and decamped.

On the 5th General Irvin McDowell died in San Francisco, in his sixty-seventh year, from disease of the stomach. He graduated at West Point in 1838, served in the Mexican war, and at the close of the rebellion was promoted to Major-General in the regular army.

May 18 has been fixed by Judge Gresham as the date for hearing argument in the case of Mackin and Gallagher, convicted of election frauds in Chicago.

During March, 1885, the earnings of the Union Pacific Railroad were $1,[illegible] expenses, $1,[illegible]; surplus earnings, $[illegible], an increase of the latter over the same month last year of $[illegible].

According to advices from Pierre, D. T., trouble had begun in earnest in the Winnebago Reservation on the 5th. The Indians were destroying the property of settlers wherever they could, and the latter were preparing for [illegible].

Reunion of the Army of the Potomac at Baltimore—A Turbulent Scene Over a Resolution to Admit Ex-Confederate Soldiers to the Meetings—General Grant Re-Elected Commander.

Baltimore, Md., May [illegible].—The reunion of the Society of the Army of the Potomac here was largely attended. The eleven corps participating organized and elected officers in separate meetings. The business meeting was held in Ford's Opera House yesterday afternoon, the stage being set as a camp, with a portrait of General Grant hung in the center proscenium arch. Many distinguished men occupied seats on the stage. General Horatio C. King, who acted as Chairman, said he had been commissioned by General Grant to express the latter's deep disappointment at being unable to attend. General Vandervoort said that the National Encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic would probably be held in San Francisco, the California Legislature having appropriated $25,000 for the entertainment of visitors. General John C. Robinson then advanced on crutches and moved that General Grant be re-elected [illegible]

A BLOODY CONFLICT.

A Fight Between Illinois State Troops and Striking Quarrymen at Lemont—Assaulted with Sticks and Stones the Militiamen Fire Into the Mob—Three Men Killed and a Number of Strikers and Soldiers Wounded.

Lemont, Ill., May 5.—At 6:30 yesterday morning Colonel Bennett, commanding the troops at Joliet, received orders from the Governor to proceed to Lemont, it being feared that the striking quarrymen at that point contemplated a disturbance. A special train was in waiting, and at eight o'clock four companies of the Fourth Regiment, with a detachment of C Battery of Artillery at Joliet, and a Gatling gun and camp equipments, left Joliet for this place. About one and a half miles from the town they were met by Deputy Sheriff Potter at the county line, and the troops disembarked. The Sheriff ordered the Colonel to deploy his men, as there was a large crowd assembled at the depot waiting for the train. Company D, of Ottawa, was [illegible]

A Large Manufacturing Building Suddenly Collapses—The Ruins Take Fire, and Many Human Lives are Lost as a Result—Three Charred Bodies Taken from the Debris.

New York, May 6.—At 9:30 yesterday morning an alarm was sent out to fire headquarters for the South Ferry station, Brooklyn. Within half an hour afterward there were four alarms and two special calls, which hurried eighteen fire companies to the scene of a disaster the extent of which will probably not be known for some days. Fronting two hundred feet on State street is a building known as "the State street machine shop." It is, in fact, only a series of irregular but connected buildings, which occupy most of the space of the interior of the block bounded by Atlantic avenue and State street and Hicks and Columbia streets. The principal entrance to these buildings is on Atlantic avenue. When the firemen got to the Atlantic avenue entrance they found that all of the interior of the buildings were in flames, and that the westerly wall of the five-story building had fallen out and carried with it the extension of the tenements fronting on Atlantic avenue and directly [illegible]

THE PUBLIC DEBT STATEMENT.

Customs Receipts for April—Counting the Funds.

The public debt statement for April was prepared at the Treasury Department yesterday in both the old and new forms. Approved copies, with all details, will not, however, be ready for distribution until today. According to the old form of statement the reduction in the public debt during April amounted to $5,464,690.38, while in the new form the amount of reduction is placed at $4,837,330.71. This discrepancy, amounting to $627,259.67, is due to the fact that in the new form two items, accrued and unpaid April interest on Pacific Railroad bonds, amounting to $298,037.50, and the amount of increase during the month in fractional and minor coins, aggregating $329,219.11, are treated—the first as liabilities and the latter as assets unavailable for debt reduction.

In the old form the available cash in the Treasury is shown to be $155,815,043 and in the new form the "net cash balance on hand" is placed at $23,957,821. The difference is accounted for by adding to the "net cash balance" reported in the new form, $100,000,000 reserve held for the redemp[illegible]

Reports to the State Board of Health by forty-four observers in different parts of the State, for the week ended April 25, indicated that influenza and intermittent fever increased, and pneumonia, measles, scarlet fever and diarrhea decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at fifteen places, scarlet fever at thirteen, measles at seven places and small-pox at Alba and Bellevue.

A tramp who recently endeavored to climb upon a freight train at Detroit fell with his neck across the rail, and was instantly beheaded.

Mrs. M. E. Peudall's private sanitarium at Battle Creek, a two-story brick building, and its furniture, were nearly destroyed by fire early the other morning. [illegible]

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

Senate—On the 28th, a resolution was introduced reciting that great difficulties were likely to ensue on account of the division of the Supreme Court upon the constitutionality of the tax law, and instructing the Auditor-General to suspend the sale of delinquent taxes advertised for May 4 next or until such time as the Legislature may direct, was temporarily laid on the table. Bills passed: For a ferry across Pine Lake relative to burial grounds; to punish frauds on hotel keepers; an appropriation for a State Industrial Home for Girls.

House—Bills passed: Relative to St. Mary's Ship Canal; amending the law relative to dentistry; amending and regulating the liability of employers in case of personal injury to their employes; establishing the Upper Peninsular Mining Schools; to prevent accidents by line shafting on a fair ground when machinery is used; amending the act relative to a State agency for juvenile offenders.

Senate—On the 29th the Governor signed the resolution relative to the spring tax sales, ordering the County Treasurer to suspend such sales, which was to be on May 4. Bills passed: Incorporating the Village of Chippewa; amending the charter of Ludington; relative to the port [illegible] of the Upper Peninsula; to prevent the spread of contagious diseases among cattle.

TURNING BACK.

A Mugwump's Complaint Concerning Certain Presidential Appointments.

Mr. Cleveland's appointment of Internal Revenue Collectors for New England are a complete going back from all his previous record in appointments and declarations. If such appointments were asked for by the local constituencies, he should at least have been warned by Mr. Endicott. If he consulted the New England members of his Cabinet, that three such appointments would nauseate even the Democrats of this section. Pillsbury and Chase were fellow-conspirators in the attempt to steal the State of Maine for Garcelon—a scheme which covered the Democratic party with shame throughout this section. Pillsbury, since his migration to Massachusetts, has been an obsequious Butler man. Chase remains in Maine to become Internal Revenue Collector for that State. Troup, the Connecticut appointee, is a labor and greenback agitator and Butler demagogue. That the President should fall into such [illegible]

SECRETARY BAYARD.

Entirely Creditable to the Secretary of State if Current Rumor Be True.

The statement that Secretary of State Bayard is already tired of his office and thinks of resigning at an early date, may or may not be true; but it would be creditable to Secretary Bayard if it were true, that he has already begun to realize his mistake in accepting an office in which his temperament, his prejudices and his training have united to lead him into a series of remarkable blunders. President Cleveland's Administration has seriously suffered from the extraordinary and apparently stupid errors of the State Department. Mr. Bayard seems to have acted upon the theory that a man who had been a rampant rebel or had been one of Mr. Bayard's personal friends had sufficiently established his ability, character and fitness to be sent abroad to represent the United States as Ambassador in a foreign court, so that careful inquiry into his antecedents would be superfluous. HARTER'S THE ONLY TRUE IRON TONIC

FACTS REGARDING Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic

It will purify and enrich the BLOOD, regulate the LIVER and KIDNEYS, and RESTORE THE HEALTH and VIGOR of YOUTH! In all those diseases requiring a certain and efficient TONIC, especially Dyspepsia, Want of Appetite, Indigestion, Lack of Strength, etc., its use is marked with immediate and wonderful results. Bones, muscles and nerves receive new force. Enlivens the mind and supplies Brain Power.

LADIES suffering from all complaints peculiar to their sex will find in DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC a safe and speedy cure. It gives a clear and healthy complexion. The strongest testimony to the value of Dr. Harter's Iron Tonic is that frequent attempts at counterfeiting have only added to the popularity of the original. If you earnestly desire health do not experiment—get the ORIGINAL AND BEST.

(Send your address to The Dr. Harter Med. Co., St. Louis, Mo., for our "DREAM BOOK." Full of strange and useful information, free.)

DR. HARTER'S IRON TONIC IS FOR SALE BY ALL DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS EVERYWHERE.

WHO BIDES HIS TIME.

Who bides his time, and day by day
Faces defeat full patiently,
And lifts a mirthful roundelay,
However poor his fortunes be—
He will not fail in any qualm
Of poverty—the paltry dime
It will grow golden in his palm,
Who bides his time.

Who bides his time—he tastes the sweet
Of honey in the saltest tear,
And though he fares with slowest feet
Joy runs to meet him, drawing near;
The birds are heralds of his cause,
And like a never-ending rhyme,
The roadsides bloom in his applause
Who bides his time.

Who bides his time and fevers not
In the hot race that none achieves,
Shall wear cool wreathen laurel, wrought
With crimson berries in the leaves,
And he shall reign a goodly king,
And sway his hand o'er every clime,
With peace writ on his signet ring,
Who bides his time.

OLD LADY PINGREE.

A Story of Honest Pride and Self-Sacrifice.

It was almost dark at half past four. Nancy Pingree stood staring out at one of her front windows. Not a person was passing on the wide country road; not one came up the old brick walk between the dry phlox bushes to the house.

Nancy's face took on an anxious look, she asked many questions about the sudden death of Mrs. Powers. She kept recurring to the same topic all the evening. "Strange how sudden folks go nowadays," she often repeated.

At length just before Mrs. Holmes went, she stood up with an air of resolution. "Mis' Holmes," said she, with a solemn tremor in her voice, "I wish you'd just step in here a minute."

Mrs. Holmes followed her into the bedroom, which opened out of the sitting-room. Nancy pulled out the bottom drawer in a tall mahogany bureau.

"Look here, Mis' Holmes. I've been thinkin' of it over for some time, an' wantin' to speak about it; an' hearin' old Mis' Powers was took so sudden, makes me think mebbe I'd better not put it off any longer. In case anything happened to me, you'd probably be one to come in an' see things, an' you'd want to know where everything was, so you could put your hand on it. Well, all the clothes you'd need are right there, folded up in that drawer. An', Mis' Holmes, you'll never speak of this to nobody?"

"No, I won't."

"In this corner, under the clothes, you'll find the money to pay for my buryin'. I've been savin' of it up, a few cents at a time, this twenty year. I calculate there's enough for everythin' I want to be put in that vacant place at the end of the Pingree lot, an' have a flat stone, like the others, you know. If I leave it with you, you'll see that it's all done right, won't you Mis' Holmes? I feel pretty perticklar about it. I'm the last of the hull family, you know, an' they were pretty smart folks. It's all run out now. I ain't nothin', but I'd kinder like to have my buryin' ...

John A. Logan Elected U. S. Senator.

In the joint session of the Legislature last week Monday there was a great jam in the House both on the floor and in the galleries. Fifty-one Senators and 153 Representatives were present. When the vote was taken dead silence prevailed. ... refused to vote. The Senators all voted for Logan, giving him 26 votes. ... vote was received with cheers. When ... name was called, in a long speech explaining his position, he voted for John A. Logan under protest and the announcement was received with the wildest cheers. This gave a vote of 103 for Logan. On call of absentees the Democrats voted solidly for Judge Lambert Tree. After roll call Baker, McNary, ...

THE MYSTERY SOLVED.

"Nonsense! I shall not marry at all."

"Why, you certainly mean to marry John Brant?"

"Assuredly I do not. He is passable, that's all."

"Then it will be Harry Rogers."

"Never! Harry Rogers is not endurable with his mild ways and his meek courtesy."

"That will do to tell me, Miss May Saunders, but wait till either of the gentlemen proposes to you, and you will accept."

"They have both proposed, and both been refused within the past twenty-four hours. There now! what do you think of that? Haven't I just a little bit of spirit and independence?"

"Why, May Saunders, you are a silly girl to refuse either of these gentlemen. You have made the first great mistake of your life. Reconsider what you have done, and accept one or the other of them."

"I will do no such thing. I'll live and die an old maid before I marry either of them, or any other man, for the matter of that."

"We will both live long enough to ..."

A story is told of a shrewish Scotchwoman who tried to wean her husband from the dram shop by employing her brother to act the part of a ghost, and frighten John on his way home. "Who are you?" said the gudman, as the apparition rose before him from behind a bush. "I am Auld Nick," was the reply. "Come awa', man," said John, nothing daunted. "Gie's a shake o' your hand. I am married tae a sister o' yours."

"But how did it escape getting into the evening papers?" enquired May.

"Oh, it's a great secret, and isn't to be spoken of outside the bank," was Brant's reply.

"Well, then, you are an excellent hand to keep a secret, Mr. Brant, I must say."

John Brant winced under this retort.

"How do you account for the loss of the money, Mr. Brant?"

"I don't account for it. There is only one man who can."

"Who is that?"

"Harry Rogers, the cashier. The money was in his custody, and he ought to know what became of it."

"John Brant, what do you mean?"

"Well, nothing; only that Harry Rogers ought to know what became of the money in his charge."

"I think I can fathom your meaning, Mr. Brant, and it is ungenerous, if not unjust, and without good grounds."

There was something in May's voice which suggested to Brant that it was the part of discretion to drop the subject, and he quickly invented an excuse for saying good-evening.

cashier were in love with the young lady who had called his services into requisition.

"So it was the bookkeeper that told you the secret in the first place?" enquired the detective.

"Yes."

"And what was the motive?"

"I haven't the remotest idea."

The detective accidently struck his foot against the work basket, and overturned it. With an apology for his awkwardness he began to replace the contents.

"Oh, yes, Mr. ...," exclaimed May, "there is a letter that Mr. Brant dropped on the night he told me of the first robbery, and I had forgotten to return it to him."

"Let me see it," said the detective.

He opened the letter and exclaimed, "What's this! Why, here are the identical five one hundred pound notes stolen on the first occasion! And Mr. Bookkeeper dropped them. He wanted to drive his rival, the cashier, out of the field, and then marry Miss May Saunders. You needn't blush, nor you needn't deny it. Say nothing for the present."

Opera-Houses, Theaters, Bowling-Alleys, Skating-Rinks, Etc.

Thoughts Drawn from the Destruction of the Temple by Samson—Sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D.

Dr. Talmage recently preached in the Brooklyn Tabernacle on the subject: "Opera-houses, theaters, bowling-alleys, skating-rinks, and all styles of amusement, good and bad, on trial." The text was from Judges, xvi., 25: "And it came to pass when their hearts were merry that they said: Call for Samson, that he may make us sport. And they called for Samson out of the prison-house, and he made them sport." Mr. Talmage said:

There were three thousand people assembled in the Temple of Dagon. They had come to make sport of eyeless Samson. They were all ready for the entertainment. They began to clap and pound, impatient for the amusement to begin, and they cried: "Fetch him out! Fetch him out!" Yonder I see the blind old giant coming, led by the hand of a child into the very midst of the temple. At his first appearance there goes up a shout of laughter and derision. The blind old giant pretends to be tired and wants to rest himself against the pillars of the house. So he says to the lad who leads him, "Show me where the main pillars are." The lad does so. Then the strong man puts his right hand on one pillar, and with the mightiest push that mortal ever made throws himself forward until the whole house comes down in thunderous crash, grinding the audience like grapes in a wine-press. "And so it came to pass when their hearts were merry that they said, 'Call for Samson, that he may make us sport.' And they called for Samson out of the prison-house, and he made them sport." In other words, there are amusements that are destructive and bring down disaster and death upon the heads of those who practice them. While they laugh and cheer they die. The three thousand who perished that day in the tinea are as nothing compared with the tens of thousands who have been destroyed body, mind and soul ...

... to "go shopping" have their counterparts in uneducated children, bankruptcies that shock the money market and appall the church and that send drunkenness staggering across the richly figured carpet of the mansion and dashing into the mirror and drowning out the carol of music with the whooping of bloated sons come home to break their old mother's heart. When men go into amusements that they can not afford they first borrow what they can not earn, and then they steal what they can not borrow. First they go into embarrassments and then into lying, and then into theft, and when a man gets as far on as that he does not stop short of the penitentiary. There is not a prison in the land where there are not victims of unsanctified amusements. How often I have had parents come to me and ask me to go over to New York and beg their boy off from crimes that he had committed against his employer—the taking of funds out of the employer's till or the disarrangement of the accounts. Why, he had salary enough to pay all lawful expenditure, but not enough salary to meet his sinful amusements.

How brightly the path of unrestrained amusement opens! The young man says: "Now I am off for a good time. Never mind economy. I'll get money somehow. What a fine road! What a beautiful day for a ride! Crack the whip and over the turnpike! Come, boys, fill high your glasses. Drink! Long life, health, plenty of rides just like this!" Hard working-men hear the clatter of the hoofs and look up and say: "Why, I wonder where those fellows get their money from? We have to toil and drudge. They do nothing." To these gay men life is a thrill and an excitement. They stare at other people and in turn are stared at. The watch-chain jingles. The cup foams. The cheeks flush. The eyes flash. The midnight hears their guffaw. They swagger. They jostle decent men off the sidewalk. They take the name of God in vain. They parody the hymn they learned at their mother's knee; and to all pictures of coming disaster they cry out, "Who cares!" and to the counsel of some Christian friend, "Who are you?" Passing along the street some night you hear a shriek in a grog-shop, the rattle of the watchman's club, the rush of the police. What is the matter now? Oh, this reckless young man has been killed in a grog-shop fight. ...

and did all that lay in my power for him.

When the news of the accident was published in the city, it occasioned great excitement. Several of Sir James' former colleagues immediately met together, and one of them rode to the house to request that I would not leave it so long as my patient continued to breathe. I was to summon any assistance that I might need, and to do exactly as I deemed best.

"We would move heaven and earth," said the gentleman, "to preserve his valuable life."

"I feel," said I, "that there is not the slightest hope of saving it; but you may be sure that I will spare no pains."

Sir James had fainted during his removal from the carriage to the house, and he did not regain the use of his senses for some hours afterward. I was sitting by his bedside when he opened his eyes.

"So I'm not gone yet, doctor," he said, with a weird kind of humor. "Am I to last for long?"

"Who can say?" I replied. "You are sadly hurt. Are you in much pain?"

"No, thank God! In pain, but not in severe pain."

"I should warn you," I said, as gently as I could, "that if you have any worldly affairs to settle, you should settle them speedily. There is grievous danger."

"I know it," he returned, with a sad smile; "but I have settled everything—everything, that is, that a lawyer could help me in. Yet before I die there is something that I should like to confide to you."

"Will it agitate you to tell it?"

"I'm afraid it will, a little," he replied.

"Then wait until to-morrow, Sir James. The danger is great—even inevitable I fear, but not immediate; and you had better wait until you are calmer, and, let us hope, stronger. The shock has tried you terribly, and you have not yet had time to recover from it."

"As you will," he assented. "But do not leave it until too late."

NOW FOR 1888.

The Republican Party Will Be on Hand With a Victorious Candidate in the Next Campaign.

At the fourth anniversary dinner of the Young Republican Club in Philadelphia May 11 Charles Emery Smith, editor of the Philadelphia Press, was called up, and responded as follows to the sentiment, "1888. You'll find us there again."

I congratulate this club of intelligent, earnest, aggressive young Republicans upon its honorable history. I congratulate you upon your brilliant part in the memorable campaign of last year. And I congratulate you that, undismayed by the narrow defeat which disappointed your hopes in that great struggle, you are still standing shoulder to shoulder with unbroken ranks and steady looking forward with undaunted spirit to the greater conflict, and I trust to the assured victory, of 1888. [Applause.]

You ask me to speak of 1888. It is not too early to think of that momentous battle which will decide whether the accident of last year shall become the deliberate judgment of the American people or whether the party which conducted the Republic with unparalleled success through the storms and the triumphs of a quarter of a century shall be restored to the place of power from which, by the merest chance at the last hour, it was wrongfully driven. [illegible]

...the most fertile sources of corruption in the service. If the President hopes to make a reform he must begin at that end. And he may do well to remember that, as by the Constitution the Representatives appropriate the money which pays office-holders, and Senators sit in judgment on the more important appointments, there is an evident and great impropriety in either class being allowed to influence the nomination of persons to office. The new Administration need not hurry about making either removals or appointments. The people are in no haste. But it ought not to allow members of Congress or political bosses to solicit or claim offices, and it ought to view the recommendations of such people with constant distrust.

And that reminds us that the President ought to make an order to all his Cabinet officers that they shall pay no attention to the entreaties or recommendations of Vice-President Hendricks.—N. Y. Herald, (Dem.)

THE "CONFIDENTIAL" FRAUD.

The "confidential" circular of Postmaster-General Vilas is one of the most extraordinary documents that ever emanated from a Cabinet officer. Whether we consider its substance, its form, its sincerity or its discretion it is astonishing in every aspect. In the first place, it is remarkable that a Cabinet Minister should send out a letter of instructions as to the method of securing appointments and mark it "confidential." If it was legitimate and proper, it should have been open and unreserved. If it was not legitimate, it should not have been sent out in a "confidential" or any other way. It is utterly repugnant to all sense of right and propriety that one of the chiefs of the Administration should undertake in a clandestine manner to organize a raid on the public service.

But bad as is the manner of the letter, it is far worse than its matter. What is it but a plain invitation to jealous and hungry partisans to rake and scrape all the charges they can find or fabricate against the incumbents of public offices? What is it but an undisguised proclamation that the Administration encourages clamorous place-seekers in spreading a drag-net of scandal, in turning the crank of a smut-machine and in organizing a mill of slander? The Postmaster-General "confidentially" tells the Democratic members of Congress that he wants them to hunt up charges; that almost anything in the way of accusation will do, that he will not pigeon-hole their representations, but that he will proceed at once to make removals if they will only give him the pretext. He makes a bid for proposals, and offers the easiest possible terms.

As it is not supposed that any valid charges can be found against any considerable number of officers, the Postmaster-General seizes upon the pretense of "offensive partisanship" and gives it the broadest conceivable scope and interpretation. [illegible]

NARCOTICS.

The Opium Habit, Hasheesh, the Pipe and the Chew.

A Sermon by Rev. Dr. Talmage on the Deleterious and Deplorable Effects of the Indulgence in Tobacco and Kindred Vices.

The subject of a recent sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage was: "Does the use of tobacco cause cancerous and other troubles?" The text was from Genesis i., 11: "Let the earth bring forth grass and herb-yielding seed." Dr. Talmage said:

The first born of earth were the grass-blade and the herb. They preceded the brute creation and the human family—the grass for animal life, the herb for human service. The cattle took possession of its inheritance, the grass blade, and man took possession of his inheritance, the herb. This herb we have for food in case of hunger, for narcotic in case of insomnia, for anodyne under paroxysm of pain, or for stimulus when the pulses flag under the weight of disease. The caterer takes the herb and serves it up in all delicacies. The physician takes the herb and compounds it for physical recuperation. Millions of the human race take it for ruinous debauchery of body and mind. The herb, divinely created and for good purposes, in cases without number is prostituted for evil results. There is a lawful and unlawful use of the herbaceous kingdom.

[illegible]

...many ministers of religion who smoke and chew. They smoke until they get the bronchitis, and the dear people have to pay their expenses to Europe. They smoke until the nervous system breaks down. They smoke themselves to death. I could name three eminent clergymen who died of cancer in the mouth, and in every case the physician said it was tobacco. There has been many a clergyman whose tombstone was all covered up with the eulogy, which ought to have had the honest epitaph: "Killed by too much Cavendish." Some of them smoke until the room is blue, and their spirits are blue, and the world is blue, and everything is blue. Time was when that passed by such sins; but it becomes now the duty of the American clergy who indulge in this narcotic to repent. How can a man preach temperance to the people when he is himself indulging in an appetite like that? [illegible]

HASHEESH.

I take a step further. In all ages the world has sought some flower or herb or weed to stimulate its lethargy or to compose its grief. A drug called nepenthe was widely used among the ancient Greeks and the ancient Egyptians for narcotic purposes. The Theban women knew how to compound it. You had but to chew the leaves and your sadness was whelmed with hilarity. But nepenthe passed out from the consideration of the world. Next came hasheesh, which is made from Indian hemp. It is manufactured from the flowers at the top, or workmen in leather clothing walk through the fields of hemp and the exudation from the hemp adheres to the leathern garments, and then this exudation is scraped off and prepared with aromatics and becomes an intoxicant for the people. Whole nations have been stimulated, narcotized and made imbecile with this accursed hasheesh. The visions kindled by that drug are said to be gorgeous and magnificent beyond all description, but it finally takes down body, mind and soul in horrible death.

The North Star lost her wheel and a part of her shaft, Monday.

The improvements on the steamer Faxton will detain her from her route until next week.

Many complaints are brought against the tugs and steamers running at full speed in Round lake. Proper legal steps will be taken in case it is continued.

The steamer Friant gives an excursion to Beaver Island, Sunday, from East Jordan and Charlevoix. Capt. Vanderhoef will make it pleasant for those on board.

It seems that Capt. Mudge of the schooner May, of whose passage through Oshkosh mention was made last week, was partially owned here by Albert Mudge who knew nothing of the proposed southern trip of the schooner and instead was daily expecting her return to Charlevoix.

The new S. H. Davis & Co. fish tugs, the Fisherman and Sea Wing, arrived Thursday from Detroit. The former is 55 feet long, 13½ beam with a 12 square engine, and the latter is 65 feet long, 13½ beam and engine 14x16. Either tug can easily make 14 miles an hour and the whistle of the Sea Wing sounds like a banshee's wail and is enough to make the dead burst their cerements.

Capt. Jamieson, of the schooner Houghton, desires to extend his thanks to Capt. Joseph Ferguson, of the tug George E. Fisher, of Beaver Harbor, and Capt. Miller, of the life-saving crew of the same port, for their timely assistance when the Houghton went on Hog Island reef. Capt.

Gail Hamilton on Prohibition.

Gail Hamilton (Miss Dodge) has a strong essay in the North American for June on the Prohibition party and what it has accomplished. Her pen has lost none of its keenness when turned against her sisters of the W. C. T. U. The essay is rich in irony, powerful in logic, and unsurpassed in wit and sarcasm by any of her previous papers. She pours scorn in scalding torrents upon the sickly sentimentality which she avers characterized the campaign conducted by Miss Willard, and upon the feminine gush which marked the national convention of the W. C. T. U. last year. She quotes liberally from the speeches in the convention and ridicules the "dear sister" business, the ...

Railroad Lands in Towns 34 and 35 N, R 4 West

The following letter from the Asst. Commissioner of the Land office at Washington, D. C., will be of great interest to the people of eastern Emmet and Charlevoix counties:

PETER BOVEE, Esq., LITTLEFIELD, Michigan. Sir: In reply to your inquiry in relation to land in Townships 34 and 35 N, R. 4 W., Michigan, selected by the Jackson, Lansing & Saginaw R. R. Co., you are advised that by letter of May 11, 1885, addressed to the local officers at Reed City, Michigan, the selections by said company in said townships were held for cancellation, subject to appeal by the company within 60 days.

Should the company fail to appeal, or in case of an appeal, should the decision of this office be affirmed, the land covered by said sections would be subject to entry.

Very Respectfully,
L. HARRISON,
Asst. Commissioner.

—Emmet, Cheboygan and Manitou counties will constitute a Representative District under the new apportionment, and Charlie Hampton is happy.

—There seems to be quite a lively competition between Capt. H. G. Edwards and Jas. Martin for the appointment as keeper of the Charlevoix pier light.

—Remember the removal or injury of any tree or shrub on the Charlevoix park is a violation of a village ordinance and punishable by fine or imprisonment.

—There are only about eight more vacant lots in the Charlevoix cemetery, and the Board of Health are about to have an additional plat cleared and prepared for survey.

—Traverse City is just waking up to the necessity of putting a telephone fire alarm system. We have had a telephone system for some time. But then Charlevoix has to set the examples for neighboring towns.

—W. P. Brown returned Friday from an extended eastern trip. He returned via Howell, Mich., his former home, and brought with him the remains of his daughter, who died at Howell three years ago, for interment in the Charlevoix cemetery.

—The irrepressibly jolly Dr. H. C. Coalman, of Torch Lake, was in town Sunday and Monday.

—Mrs. Wood and James E. Wood, are making great improvements on their Main street residences.

—Farmers tell us that the strawberry crop promises to be good, and a largely increased product is expected.

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

SENATE—On the 26th the new General Tax Law bill was passed. The bill amending the General Railroad law so as to establish a local car load and to define a legal tender was defeated. Bills passed: Making it a felony to use explosives for unlawful purposes; protecting defendants when they have given notice of set-off; providing for bringing suits against co-operative insurance companies organized under the laws of other States.

HOUSE—Additional compensation at the rate of three dollars per day during the session was allowed Clerk Crossman. The bill to regulate elections was tabled. The bill providing for uniform text books in primary schools was lost. Bills passed: Creating the office of Commissioner of toll roads and toll bridges; authorizing Bay County to buy and maintain a bridge across the Saginaw River; the joint resolution submitting an amendment to the people to fix the pay of members of the Legislature at $1,000 per session, providing for the use of automatic couplers on railroads.

SENATE—On the 27th the Governor notified the Senate of his approval of various acts passed by this body. Among the bills passed were the following: Incorporating the city of Albion; protecting all citizens in their civil rights; amending and consolidating the laws relative to insane asylums; providing for the deposit of public moneys by County Treasurers with banking corporations on interest; preventing the sale of immoral books, papers and pictures. The Dodge Telephone bill was defeated on third reading by a vote of 43 to 31. This bill placed the rate for telephones at $2.50 per month with twenty per cent. reduction when more than one instrument was used by the same parties.

HOUSE—The bill regulating the use of telephones was tabled. Among the bills passed were the following: Authorizing transcripts of judgments from one Justice to another; conferring on Michigan men who served in the First New York Artillery the rights of Michigan volunteers; to secure uniform text books in primary schools.

SENATE—On the 28th the concurrent resolution authorizing the Board of State Auditors to light the capitol and grounds with electric [light] was ordered printed. ARTIFICIAL FLOWERS.

How They Are Made, Where They Are Made and Who Make Them.

"There are at least 1,[illegible] girls in this city engaged in the manufacture of artificial flowers," said a large manufacturer yesterday. "Most of them are French girls and the work is done in old lofts up around the French quarter. Few of these girls are of the type so familiar to the novel-reader, the sweet young thing with a hectic flush and a consumptive cough, who is supporting her three decrepit maiden aunts on the pittance earned at the deadly trade. Most of them are buxom damsels with big feet and a well developed tendency to spend their wages on the adornment of their persons. Still some parts of the work do interfere with their breathing machinery, I believe. New York furnishes about half the stock consumed in this country, but only the cheaper varieties are manufactured here.

"The method is simply this: A hundred layers of prepared tinted silk are laid one over the other and cut out by a stamp into the desired shape. These are then veined, shaded and put into the required shape by the girls. No, there is no difference of taste exhibited by different parts of the country. The best people in every section want the best goods, though the South is rather a slight buyer, and prefers the cheapest varieties.

"With artificial flowers, ostrich-feathers and plumes are naturally connected. These are imported in the raw state and colored and finished here. There are several large dealers. One especially carries on an immense trade, and is now putting up a large building to accommodate his growing business. He is doubtless familiar to your readers as a trotting man, as he owns the fastest trotting stall on there is going, and is a prominent figure in racing circles."—N. Y. Tribune.

OUR DRUGGIST

Says that when a customer asks for THE BEST Spring Medicine he confidently recommends

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

From E. S. Russell, Druggist, [illegible]

I have been in the drug and prescription business in [illegible] years, and am the oldest druggist here. I was the first to introduce [illegible] medicines in this city. I believe in them. Ayer's Sarsaparilla I take pleasure in recommending to my customers, well knowing it to give satisfaction. In all my experience, as a druggist, I have yet to hear the first complaint against it.

From F. & F. [illegible]

Having sold Ayer's Sarsaparilla since it was first placed upon the market, we can say, after an experience covering a quarter of a century, that we have yet to learn of a case where it has failed to give satisfaction. Its merits are fully established.

From C. Way & Co., Portland, Me.

We have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla for years, and our customers are much pleased with its effects. We believe it to be one of the best medicines in the market.

A SEA CLIFF ROMANCE.

She had gone down to engage board. The first place at which she inquired did not suit; neither did the second; the third did. In the first place two gentlemen were also seeking for board. She heard them talking, but did not see them. They, however, saw her, and were impressed. All three met on the boat returning home. She had made acquaintance with a lady on board, and was earnestly engaged in talking when, to use her own words—

"I perceived the most remarkable gentleman looking at me rather intently. Well, I had noticed him a little before that—he looked so much like my cousin John—and I thought now that he might have imagined I wanted to flirt with him. When he addressed me I was covered with confusion. Indeed, I can't remember when I so completely lost my self-possession. But he only asked me what I thought of the lady in the first place, and if I had been to Potter's. I answered him very randomly that I had not fully decided on going there yet, and then excused myself and went below."

The bevy of gay girls to whom she was relating her experience exchanged glances at the mention of her loss of self-possession, and commented upon her rather freely after she had taken her departure.

"Well, I thought I should explode when I heard her say she lost her self-possession!"

"Did you ever hear a person so oblivious—not taking her infirmity into consideration—say that? She believed any one wanted to flirt with her!"

"Oh, she is a decided character. If she wanted to go on the stage a manager need not take the trouble to get ready an effective play. Anything, however nonsensical, that served as an excuse for her appearance, would draw a full house. She would undoubtedly be a success."

The subject of the above remarks was somewhere between fifty and fifty-five. Her face had never been pretty, if there was nothing else to keep it from being called so, her nose [illegible] out of proportion to the remaining features, and little [illegible] would have been enough. However, [illegible] the defect of nature [illegible] by bringing her hair to the front in a curve, and [illegible] it [illegible]. Though possessing not a single attractive feature, there was nothing decidedly repulsive about her. She prided herself on her small hands and feet and her plump form, but as she was very large, her gait, in spite of these advantages, was anything but graceful.

She went to Sea Cliff, and in a few weeks I joined her there. She had written that it was a most delightful place, and as the boat neared the landing I thought I never [illegible] anything more romantic. I looked over the railing and saw one long point of land projecting into the water. To the right, cultivated land curved in and out gradually flattening as it reached the shore, and for a little distance forming marshes, then rising almost perpendicularly into cliffs, white and [illegible] in the sunlight. A roadway of sand, and then other perpendicular cliffs, perfectly bare, but crowned on the top with tall straight trees. To the left a low, sandy beach, with the tide going out, and the water rippling over the stones, and dashing against the rocks scattered here and there. A series of steps, upheld by the trunks of trees, led to the woods, among which the house was hidden.

Miss Day, with a flushed, anxious face, sat awaiting me, garbed in a [illegible] dress and red shawl, and was fanning herself vigorously.

"Oh," she exclaimed, as soon as she saw me, "I should have been so disappointed if you had not come! Our house is as good as a play, and the opportunities for studying human nature unlimited. A married woman with two children, in love with a man who pretends to be a bachelor, but whom we all believe to be married. A little mite of a man—'Fra Diavolo' I call him, on account of the reputation he bears, but which I do not believe he merits, because he has been exceedingly kind and attentive to me; the postmistress, who is losing her heart to cousin Charley, a mere boy; and a queer sort of a chap, a terrible eater, but a very respectable looking man."

She had been resting on a bench while breathlessly telling the news, and just as she finished, the subject of her last remarks came up the steps—"Fra Diavolo" and the queer chap. She introduced them to me with emphasis. "Fra Diavolo" was indeed a little mite of a man. The other, Mr. Howell, was tall and stout; quite a contrast to his companion and Miss Day. His face resembled Miss Day's in possessing a forehead that was larger than all the rest of his face. In fact, the hair being worn entirely off the top of his head, it extended, to use a boy's expression, "to the back of his neck." In lieu of her scallops he wore, just above his ears, a fringe of [illegible], and these, in front, appeared to unite with a long gray beard in giving dignity to his countenance. He walked with a slight inclination backward, owing to his great weight.

We went in to tea, but it was not until the next day that I heard the beginning of the romance. She confided in me that morning as we sat on the piazza.

"The singular things that have happened to me this summer!" she began. "The romantic things! I never had such an experience in my life before. To think that I should be domiciled, and my life influenced by three persons, of whose existence I became aware on the same day, was enough, but to think that an accidental meeting on board a boat, a careless look, a chance conversation, should lead to such results, is more wonderful than anything I could imagine."

"You don't mean to say," I exclaimed, "that Mr. Howell is the gentleman you met in June?"

"I do, and I might have known something was going to happen, I grew so confused; but I have had as much influence over him, I know. Oh, it has been most romantic! The first time I met him after that was on the Fourth of July. They had a clam-bake down here, and every hotel was packed. I never got a mouthful that day until three o'clock. When I came in here the first one on whom my eye fell was my acquaintance of the boat, waiting—actually waiting, on the table! Could it be possible, thought I, that with my knowledge of human nature I was deceived? You know now that I was not. Mr. Howell was simply as obliging and kind as I have ever since found him. But the strangest part is yet to come. He really went around Sea Cliff inquiring where I had engaged board, so determined was he to be near me."

Thousands Say So.

Mr. T. W. Atkins, Girard, Kan., writes: "I never hesitate to recommend your Electric Bitters to my customers, they give entire satisfaction and are rapid sellers." Electric Bitters are the purest and best medicine known and will positively cure Kidney and Liver complaints. Purify the blood and regulate the bowels. No family can afford to be without them. They will save hundreds of dollars in doctor's bills every year. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Weed & Co.

A Walking Skeleton.

Mr. E. Springer, of Mechanicsburg, Pa., writes: "I was afflicted with lung fever and abscess on lungs, and reduced to a Walking Skeleton. Got a free trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption, which did me so much good that I bought a dollar bottle. After using three bottles, found myself once more a man, completely restored to health, with a hearty appetite, and a gain in flesh of 48 lbs." Call at Weed's Drug Store and get a free trial bottle of this certain cure for all Lung Diseases. Large bottles $1.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life-giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system, carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood, if pure, makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no other. Sold by

FLOUR.

It is a fact that Flour made by the ROLLER PROCESS from Grand Traverse Wheat, will make A LARGE PERCENTAGE MORE BREAD to the barrel than Flour which is EQUALLY WHITE, made from ILLINOIS and WISCONSIN Spring wheat which is almost universally No. 2 or rejected, very little No. 1 wheat being ground in either of these states.

WE PARTICULARLY CALL ATTENTION to our FAMILY BRAND made ENTIRELY OF GRAND TRAVERSE WHEAT by the ROLLER PROCESS, to be had of J. L. HURD & CO., CHARLEVOIX and of any other responsible dealer at other points in 1/4, 1/2, or 1/2 Bbl. Sacks, as low as any Flour of equal whiteness in the market. Try it and you will be convinced that the above is a fact. Prices quoted to dealers upon application to—

"Did you ever know anything like it?"

At this point Mr. Carr and Mr. Howell joined us, and conversation was general for a few minutes. Then Mr. Howell and Miss Day became apparently alive to each other's presence, and Mr. Carr moved toward me, and in a low tone mentioned something about a ride if the roads were in good condition.

He made a mistake in thinking Miss Day so entirely absorbed in her own affairs as to lose interest in other people. She startled him out of his presence of mind by saying:

"I think you would be very selfish to go alone, Mr. Carr."

"I did not say I was going alone. I might ask some ladies to go with me."

"And rest assured, if you did, they would not refuse to go."

Mr. Carr dropped the conversation, but Mr. Howell bent and whispered low, and Miss Day's weather-worn face grew as conscious as a girl's. She had received an invitation to ride, but as the facilities were poor, it depended on circumstances whether she would go or not. Mr. Howell was to call the following evening to let her know. She dressed to receive him, getting me to arrange her back hair, but adjusting the front herself in the peculiarly becoming style mentioned before, and placing therein a few autumn leaves. She fastened a spray at her throat also. But alas for her expectations! No Mr. Howell came that night, and I felt so sorry for her that I forbore remarking it.

He explained to her next day, however, that he had been diligently searching for a conveyance, and was detained until he knew it was too late. It appeared from his representations that every conveyance in the place was engaged for every day that week; but he made amends to her for the disappointment by being particularly attentive during that day, and, in fact, every day of that eventful week.

I began to be puzzled. They were both oddities, but both were educated, and underneath the surface lay a vein of strong common sense. On reflection, the probabilities were as much in favor of something happening as not. She herself began to take a practical as well as romantic view of the matter, and his plain matter-of-fact conversations were some foundation for her opinions.

"I should expect any woman I would marry to support herself six months in the year," he averred. "I would work for her the other six."

Miss Day had an income, though she taught school in the winter.

"I would never marry a man who expected me to work," she had exclaimed.

"And I do not think any one does," she replied.

I had been watching the comedy for just one week. One afternoon I had been visiting, and reached my favorite seat on the steps just as the sun went down, a glowing ball, behind a stone-colored cloud with copper colored curves. All around it was gold—coppery, silvery, tarnished gold, all commingled; projecting rocks and flats, dark purple, edged with a soft rose color, further on stretched an ashen-tinted sea, with black, irregular rocks in the centre. To the left the dark clouds were broken up into little balls, and scattered through the golden expanse. Above that were masses of black clouds that formed strong outlines against the silvery blue with the red flame scattered through it. The reflection shone on the water against the low rounded points, whose sandy shore, interspersed with rocks, was scarcely yet covered by the incoming tide. One tiny sail stood dark against the background, and the rippling waters stretched unbroken.

As I turned reluctantly away the moon greeted me, and claimed a share of my admiration. It was so bright that I followed the way through the woods instead of going around by the path, and was startled by hearing Miss Day's voice not very far from me. Some one must have called for her to go out, I thought. She never would go with any one in the house. And then Mr. Howell's tones fell on my ear. He was saying distinctly and earnestly:

"At our age, and with our infirmities, Miss Day, sympathy takes the place of love, and as true a union may be formed as if love were the foundation. We have had our past, with its pleasures and pains, and I am almost broken down, I confess. You have borne it better and more bravely, as women usually do. Your cheerful spirit has preserved your youthful feelings, in spite of the inroads of time and disease. But you must have solitary moments, and I think the best antidote to loneliness is the necessity of keeping up another's spirits. I've remarked your ability to do that, and admired it. I have a sufficient income for two to live comfortably upon for twelve months in the year instead of six; and I think you have worked long enough to be entitled to a little rest."

I did not wait to hear Miss Day's answer; I was almost certain what it would be. Beneath the eccentricity of her demeanor dwelt a woman's heart, with its sympathetic tendencies and self-denial, as well as vanity. She was shrewd and practical, too, and the man's appeal struck every chord that is vibrating would incline her to his views. His past, as well as hers, had taught him the human nature lying deep under every kind of surface, and he used his knowledge skillfully.

I did not see Miss Day that night. The next morning, when she said she had something to tell me, I told her I thought I could guess what it was. And as I stooped to kiss her the dim eyes filled with tears, and the silly, worldly affectation that had hitherto concealed the true woman dropped from her as a needless cloak, for appreciation and sympathy had been found at last.

"Well," exclaimed one of her young friends when she heard of it, "I know a man who, from his deformity and extreme peculiarity of disposition, might be supposed never to have thought of marriage. When jokingly asked whether he imagined anyone would ever have him, he replied, 'There's not an old shoe but has an old stocking.' And after Miss Day's success, I'll believe that no matter how odd, or ugly, or old, a woman may live to be, you can't reckon on her dying an old maid. Just at some unexpected moment the correspondingly odd and ugly and old bachelor will come along, and lo! the imputation is removed forever."

A London paper gravely announces that St. Petersburg is anxiously awaiting the arrival of an American pianist who proposes, by the aid of electricity, to play twelve pianos simultaneously. Russia's cup of misery at this will soon overflow. It beats Morphy with his twelve simultaneous games at chess.

Great Head of a Rat.

Two Austin gentlemen, Colonel Yerger and Sam Bass, were talking about the comparative intelligence of animals.

"I think that a horse is the most intelligent animal," remarked Colonel Yerger.

"No, sir, the horse is not. The rat is the shrewdest and smartest little animal I know of. It has a wonderful power of discrimination. The rat never sets fire to a store by nibbling at matches until everything is insured for more than its value. A rat who is in that line of business is sharper than a fire insurance agent with a sixty-ounce brain and thirty years' experience."—Texas Siftings.

Old Paunchous Pilot.

General Henry K. Oliver is celebrated almost as much for his wit as he is as a composer of church music. The General and a friend, who was a stranger in Boston, were walking down Washington street one afternoon when their attention was attracted to a very large man wearing a heavy blue overcoat, who was approaching. He was a man who, from his enormous proportions and great breadth of stomach, would have been noticed anywhere, and, moreover, there were traces of salt water about him.

"Who is that man?" inquired his friend of General Oliver.

"That man," said the General, assuming a very solemn look, "is 2,000 years old."

"You surely cannot mean that," said the other.

"I do," replied the General, "and his name is Paunchous Pilot."

The Electrical Age.

The possible applications of the principle of the electrical transmission of power, writes a contributor to the Van Nostrand's Magazine, are almost numberless. We shall, I believe, at no distant date, have great central stations, possibly situated at the bottom of coal pits, where enormous steam engines will drive many electric machines. We shall have wires laid along every street, the electricity tapped into every house, and the quantity of electricity used in every house registered as gas is at present. The storage battery will fill a place corresponding to the gasometer in the gas system, making the current steady, rendering the consumer independent of the irregular action or stoppages of the dynamos of the central station, and enabling the use of dynamos of the highest tension, i. e., those which produce currents of the greatest intensity. The electricity will be passed through little electric machines to drive machinery, to produce ventilation, to replace stoves, and to work all sorts of apparatus, as well as to give everybody an electric light. Solar heat will be used to run the dynamos in the cloudless regions. Everywhere the power of the tides and such waterfalls as Niagara are to be utilized. Is not a millennium to be anticipated when the water-power of a country shall be available at every door?

Steam, which in the last century has conferred so many benefits on the world, will give way before electricity. The dynamo will replace the steam engine. This prediction seems wild and visionary, yet when steam was first thought of as an available force its advocates were considered, just as the advocates of dynamical electricity today are considered, mere enthusiasts. But public opinion never stops the march of intellect. After it had proved the powers of steam to be enormous, genius never halted, but straightway went on anticipating still more wonderful discoveries in the realm of electricity.

The prophetic kin of science was happily exhibited by Dr. Lardner in his treatise on the steam engine. "Philosophy," said he, half a century ago, "already directs her fingers at sources of inexhaustible power in the phenomena of electricity and magnetism, and many causes combine to justify the expectation that we are on the eve of mechanical discoveries still greater than any which have yet appeared, and that the steam engine itself, with the gigantic powers conferred upon it by the immortal Watt, will dwindle into insignificance in comparison with the hidden powers of nature still to be revealed; and the day will come when that machine which is now extending the blessings of civilization to the most remote skirts of the globe will cease to have existence, except in the page of history."

To-day we are beginning to appreciate the truth of this prophecy. To-day we see dynamical electricity in the forefront of the physical sciences. The principle of the transmission of power by electricity fast approaches its realization. We are, in truth, just entering upon a wonderful age.

The election of General Logan makes the United States Senate stand 41 Republicans, 32 Democrats and one vacancy.

It is said that General Grant intends, if he lives, to write a second book—a history of the men and times during the eight years of his civil administration.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania passed over the Governor's veto the bill ordering counties to bury all bodies of destitute soldiers, and mark their graves with a headstone.

A chemist in New York asserts that in every one hundred pounds of green tea used in this country the consumer drinks more than a half pound of Prussian blue and gypsum.

Grasshoppers accumulated in such quantities at a gate on a Wheatland (Cal.) ranch a few days ago that it was necessary to remove them with a shovel in order to open the gate.

General Grant's house in Philadelphia, given him by the citizens at the close of the rebellion was sold at public auction recently for $22,500. The sale was by order of W. H. Vanderbilt, who held a mortgage on the property.

READING FOR THE YOUNG.

"THAT HORRID BABY."

A True Story.

Beneath a shady elm tree
Two little brown [illegible]
[illegible]

"If a boy runs through the kitchen,
Still as any mouse can creep,
Nora says, 'Now do be aisy,
For the baby's gone to sleep!'
And when just now I asked mamma
To fix my new straw cap,
She said she really couldn't Till the baby took her nap!"

THE STOLEN RIDE.

[illegible]

my tears, for I couldn't keep from crying some, and just said: "I'm very sure my dear boy will never do such a thing again."

Then he gave me ten cents, and told me to ride down next day at the same hour I did that other day, and most likely I should see the same conductor, and then I would give him the five cents (for I had kept it: I didn't buy any candy after all). If I didn't see that conductor he told me to go on to the station at the end of the road, and give it to the man in the little office there for that conductor. He said the other man would know which was the right man by the scar.

So I rode down next day, and the conductor was the very same, so I didn't have to go to the office. I was glad of that.

But Willy Loring never saw me when I passed him for a good many days after that. At last I went up to him one day and said: "You needn't keep thinking I'm a thief, Willy Loring. I carried that five cents and paid it to the conductor, and I ain't ever going to steal a ride again."

Willy didn't speak for a minute. Then he said: "Let's go down by the park and have a game of marbles. Will you?"

And ever since then we've been ever so good friends.—Joy Allison, in Youth's Companion.

Marine.

The fish tug Ethel J., of Petoskey, was in port to-day.

The scow Hercules was hauled out at Washburn's ship yard for re-calking and other repairs.

The large Detroit steamer Saginaw passed here Tuesday night, with an excursion for Chicago.

The steam pleasure yacht Pastime, owned by Walker & Sons, of Detroit, was in port Saturday. She is one of the finest steamers of the kind afloat, costing upwards of $60,000.

Last Thursday, the scow Lottie Mason completed her load of 4,000 bushels of potatoes at Petoskey, and cleared for Cleveland. The consignment was made by Edwards & Gubl, Chicago.

The small schooner May of Charlevoix arrived at Oshkosh this week on her way to New Orleans from the Lakes, via the Fox River and the Mississippi. Three years ago the scow schooner J. F. Prince went south by the same route.—Inland Marine. Cheboygan parties hold a mortgage on the schooner for the debt contracted, but this would look as if their claim had "woodbined."—Cheboygan Tribune.

Clearances from the port of Charlevoix for ports outside the Michigan district for the week ending yesterday evening: [illegible]

Real Estate Transfers.

Following are the transfers of real estate in Charlevoix county, for the week ending yesterday noon, as recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds: [illegible]

Childrens' Day.

A choice entertainment given at night by the Sabbath school. At the morning service, address by the pastor—with good music, flowers and birds. All who love to witness a good time are invited to attend.

—The Firemens' Band are making rapid progress, and already make good music. They are about to discard the rest of their old repertoire of music and are securing an entirely new collection. The firemen propose to start a fund for the purpose of getting the boys a uniform, which project will be aided by themselves, from the earnings of an all summers work engagement. Charlevoix is large enough to have a good band, well uniformed.

—A. E. Wilson is again about the street as well, if not better than ever. Mr. Wilson will be remembered as the subject of a very remarkable case of herniotomy, some time ago. He was undoubtedly in a dying condition from strangulated hernia, and heroic measures were decided upon. Dr. Carlstein did the cutting, by invitation of Dr. Preston, the surgeon in charge. Dr. Chamberlain, of Norwood, was present as counsel. The difficulty and danger of the operation will be understood [illegible] that a six inch incision was made in the abdomen, or groin, the affected portion of the intestine taken out, operated upon and returned. The "breach" or rupture, which was the cause of the trouble, is considered by Dr Preston to be permanently cured.

—O. S. Heyden last week finished platting about thirty acres of land at Top [illegible] for the Hay Fever Association. A strip of land between the railroad track and lake has been reserved for parks and a street has been laid out conforming to the railroad track on the side furtherest from the lake and a second street farther back on rising ground. He platted about 100 lots ranging in size from 4 rods by 6, up. Several cottages are to be erected this season.—Cheboygan Tribune.

Gen. Rosecrans has been appointed register of the treasury in place of Blanche K. Bruce, resigned.

A special dispatch to the SENTINEL last evening states that Gladstone was defeated yesterday on his budget by 264 to 272 and that his resignation is expected.

M. J. L. Seabring is useing for his fine New Cottage, the high grade Sherwin Williams Paints, for sale only at L. D. Bartholomew & Co., Charlevoix.

The president among other selections yesterday appointed Herbert F. Beecher, son of the Brooklyn clergyman, collector of customs at Puget Sound, Oregon.

Neighborhood News.

W. W. Smith has leased the Center Lake hotel at Bellaire.

A party of Ann Arbor students, with their professor, are in camp near South Frankfort.

The Time, is a new and handsome little boat, will run this season between Bellaire and Elk Rapids.

There is talk of a river boat on the Manistee to do a freighting business between Sherman and Manistee.

Dr. Leach is selling school furniture through the northern counties, and putting in his spare time geologizing.

Kalkaska has no minister in her borders, and trout fishing and base ball matches take the place of hymns and sermons.

Mr. Spagenberg of Petoskey handled over $70,000 worth of meat last year, and expects to largely increase his business this year.

A farmer living in Antrim county recently sent five men to hunt a cow. After hunting two days the farmer found his missing cow tied up in his barn, where she had been two days without food or water.

Present appearances indicate a good wheat crop. It looks much better than it did this time last year, and the prospects are that farmers will not be quite so hard up as they were last fall. Grass also looks very promising.

We are informed that W. H. Fife intends starting on Monday, the 8th to a family reunion, which is to be held in Washington Co., Pa. Will be gone about two weeks.—Herald.

While the spring has seemed cold and backward, the north wind chill, and the trees slow to come to full leaf as they should by the first of June, yet in all parts of the north country there was never seen more beautiful grass and clover, or healthier looking wheat, while other farm products are well advanced. The plains are white with the blossoms of wild strawberries and whortleberries, and small fruits in the garden, especially strawberries, give promise of fruit in great abundance. Evidently "seed time and harvest will not fail" this year.—Herald.

—The firemen and their band are to be uniformed.

—Mrs. M. J. Stockman left for Grand Rapids Monday, to visit friends.

—Go and see John Dillon Saturday evening and have a good laugh.

—See the beautiful acrostic, at the M. E. church next Sabbath evening.

—We hope our highway authorities will gravel State street this season.

—Alex. Ross removed Major Green's law office yesterday, to make room for the proposed new Brown bank building.

—Capt. Lockwood, of the engineer corps, U. S. A., was in Charlevoix yesterday, looking over the government work.

—"When I holler, its law," by John Dillon as "Pilgrim Bogg," in "States Attorney" at Opera Hall Saturday evening.

—Every member of the Sabbath school and congregation are invited to the M. E. church, next Sabbath morning and evening.

—H. F. Higgins Junior Department Vice Commander, G. A. R., was in town yesterday. He is making a tour of the Posts of this region.

—The last newspaper venture in Grand Rapids—which, by the way, is a good field for a really first-class morning paper—is the weekly Herald, edited by Lloyd Breeze.

—What are we to do fourth of July? If anything is to be done let it be begun now, and not put it off till the last week before the fourth.

—The John Dillon Comedy Co., will remain and play on Monday evening, when they will present the comedy entitled 'Swap, the Yankee."

—Friday evening the best musical entertainment ever in Charlevoix will be presented at Opera Hall—The Tennesseeans. Go and hear them.

—Begle, the baker, will have a new advertisement in next issue. He is now supplied with every facility for furnishing all varieties of bakers goods.

—Al Washburn's lace imitation of a mammoth spider web, with a well designed imitation of a spider made from a silk handkerchief, which is displayed in Rosenthals' window is a masterpiece of ingenuity.

—The telephone construction gang, under Mr. John Glass, are here, and have the Norwood loop built. Norwood is now in telephone connection with Charlevoix. The construction of East Jordan and Boyne City lines will be commenced immediately.

Carpenter, Bartholomew & Co., keep constantly on hand a supply of Lime, Stucco, Cement, Salt and Plastering hair.

Hazings from Hayes.

Parties from Harbor Springs are driving the piles, preparatory to putting in several pound nets along the south shore of Little Traverse Bay.

Geo. McRoberts has moved to Burgess.

Mr. Chester Hone who has been afflicted with partial paralysis is recovering.

Moses Cooper had the misfortune of losing a valuable horse the past week.

W. C. Arnold is in southern Michigan for the purpose of purchasing a team.

One of our Hayesites is building a fence, and the wind is blowing the posts down before he gets the boards nailed on.

The Board of School Inspectors will meet at Ross school house on Saturday June 20, for the purpose of reorganizing the school district.

A couple of our Hayesites went spearing fish on Susan lake the other night, and they did not violate the law either, for their light went out and they changed the program from fishing, to trying to find their way home.—All right,—no fish.

The bill to compel telephone companies in Massachusetts to reduce their charges for instruments to $3 per month failed to pass the Legislature of that State.

The executive committee of the Charlevoix Improvement Association are doing good work. Already the fruit of their efforts is ripening, and we consider it safe to say that matters are shapening themselves for the erection here of a fine flouring mill. The question of location is being considered, and either one side or the other of the north bridge approach will be selected.

Messrs. STOCKMAN & IDDINGS,
Charlevoix, Mich.
DEAR SIRS:
We guarantee our Mixed Paints to outspread, outwear and give a better finish than any other, not excepting White lead and Oil as mixed and put on by a painter. We are willing to guarantee that if it will do all as above stated. If it fails at any time we are ready and willing to repaint the house or building [illegible] paint is properly applied, any time within three years. The paint should last, and will present a good appearance as many years as we state above, if properly put on. You can show this guarantee to any of your customers, and our reputation and business integrity for the last thirty years will be our guarantee that the above will be fulfilled.
Yours Truly,

—Charlevoix harbor is made musical by the whistles of seven tugs.

—A. L. Kanagy, son of Rev. J. J. Kanagy, has returned to Charlevoix.

—We predict that the new residence of Dr. Carlstein will be both novel and attractive.

—There are already forty applications for the position of principal of the Charlevoix school.

—Special meeting of the K. O. T. M. Thursday evening. Every member is requested to be present.

—The legislature adjourns next Saturday but Lieut. Gov. Buttars will not return for a week or more following.

—The base-ball tournament to be held here the Fourth will be the means of bringing large crowds to witness our "National game."

—D. Sherwood & Co. have a new ad in this issue. If you call upon them you will find a complete assortment, low prices and gentlemanly treatment.

—The Northern District Lodge of I. O. G. T. will meet here to-day and to-morrow. About 60 delegates and visiting members will be in attendance.

—County Treasurer Blair rejoices over a third heir.

—Stockman & Iddings have a change in ad next week.

—Charlevoix is the best advertised of any town in the state.

—The Good Templars hold open lodge in the Village hall this evening.

—When the season is over, John Dillon and Miss Macdonell will—well, no matter.

—The Meech mill at South Arm, will be sold under second mortgage next Monday.

—We have unequalled facilities for doing all classes of Fourth of July printing. Come and see us.

The exercises of childrens' day last Sabbath, were very interesting and well attended at both churches.

—Hamill, the confectioner, is adding an ice cream room to his stand near the bridge. His rustic seat is attractive.

—Miss Kate Meech who has spent the winter with relatives at Lake Forest, Ills., returned to Norwood for the summer, last week. Her friends will rejoice thereat.

—In the new apportionment the counties of Charlevoix, Antrim and Manitou shall constitute a representative district; election returns to be made to the county of Charlevoix.

—It was reported in railroad circles last week that the G. R. & I. was trying to secure control of the D. L. & N. road, but the officials of the latter company deny the rumored purchase.

—In John Dillon, our townsman Hon. John Nicholls meets an old friend, the two having lived at the same house in Chicago, some 30 years ago, when the former was only an amateur.

—We are glad to learn that Dave Bradbeer is able to be up. His condition last week was very critical, at one time it being feared that amputation of the leg would be necessary to save his life.

—The Charlevoix county seat is "on wheels" but the supervisors at their recent meeting failed to roll it a foot nearer Boyne City. The wheels appear to be stuck in the neighborhood of East Jordan.—Record.

—In view of the fact that the Charlevoix Post G. A. R. will visit Petoskey the Fourth, would it not be the "proper caper" for the Petoskey base-ball nine to participate in the Charlevoix tournament? Say "yes" or "no!"

—Preaching at the M. E. church next Saturday at 3 o'clock. Also on Sabbath 10:30 o'clock. It being the occasion of the quarterly meeting. Presiding Elder Stinchcomb will conduct the services. Union meeting at night.

—Everybody is coming to Charlevoix this summer.

—The foundation for the new Brown bank building is started.

—J. L. Hurd & Co., have a new ad, noting reductions, next week.

—Chief Petoskey died Friday at 3 P. M. from old age. He was 100 years old.

—Misses Rosenthal and Hill of Petoskey, were the guests of Alic Rosenthal over the Sabbath.

—The G. R. & I. are remodeling several of their passenger coaches into chair cars, for use this summer.

—W. Tooley and daughter of Ironton, leave for Union City next Monday, where they will remain some months.

—Remember the G. A. R. entertainment, the Blue and Gray, is billed for next week Friday and Saturday.

—Hon. F. J. Meech and family and Dr. Chamberlain and family moved into the Chamberlain residence last week.

—The McGibeney family, of which Mrs. Jessie Smith McGibeney is a member, is doing northern Michigan towns and may appear at Charlevoix.

—We sympathize with Charlie Hampton because when he comes to read the returns for his re-election he will not find the solid democratic vote of Beaver Island at his back.

—Miss Essie Buttars who has been attending the Ladies Seminary at Lake Forest University, near Chicago, returned home Saturday. Miss Esther Buttars accompanied her.

—Although the telephone bill failed to pass the Legislature, Representative Hampton says the company will have two years in which to manifest a disposition of fairness toward the people, and if they do not improve it such a bill will be passed.

—Notice the new ad of Geo. C. Begle, the new baker. Mr. Begle has the Inwood building on Bridge street attractively fitted up and a fine line of bakers' goods and confectionery on his shelves and counters. There can be no doubt but he will build up a first-class trade.

—The G. R. & I. say they will run their parlor cars to Mackinac next winter in case they are patronized as well as when they are run to Traverse City. The extra fare is small, and extra comfort great. Capt. May, the veteran conductor, should be voted an honorary member of the press association for his kindness to "the gang."

—Petoskey Record: Maj. James T. Burton is in Petoskey superintending the rehearsals of the "Spy of the Shenandoah" which will be played on the evenings of June 18, 19 and 20th, for the benefit of the Petoskey Cornet Band. People were much pleased with the drama "The Blue and the Gray" in which Maj. Burton appeared some weeks ago.

—The publisher of the Petoskey Democrat has been appointed route mail agent on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Rail Road between Fort Wayne and Cadillac, and he has already entered upon his duties. Arrangements have been made with J. G. Hill, Esq., to take charge of the editorial columns of the Democrat and he commenced with last issue.

—A letter from Charlevoix states that on Tuesday morning, June 9, at that place, the ground was covered with snow, and the boys threw aside their fishing rods and the girls neglected lawn tennis for a game of snowballing.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

This is a slander. Before daylight, on the morning of the 9th, the walks were whitened by snow, but long before the sun rose, it had disappeared.

—Governor Alger has nominated and the Senate confirmed George A. Farr, of Ottawa, and Harry H. Noble, of Antrim, as trustees of the Northern Asylum for the Insane for six years, Thomas T. Bates, of Grand Traverse, and Joseph M. French, of St. Joseph, for four years, and Alex. Chopton, of Wayne, and Charles M. Wells for two years, all to date from Jan. 1, 1885.

—Ore carriers are coming now right along, and the shipping season of 1885 is fairly open, but it does not yet show a degree of activity at all comparable to that of former seasons at the opening stage. The mines give no indications of being excessively anxious to rush ore forward this year, a sign that presages a light season's output. As the season advances, the situation may change for the better but it is plain that there isn't the vigor in the iron mining industry here which characterized it in former years.—Marquette Mining Journal.

—The northern Michigan counties are grouped according to the following arrangements in the new representative apportionment, with one representative each: Midland, Gladwin and Clare; Osceola and Missaukee, Wexford and Lake; Leelanaw and Benzie; Ogemaw, Roscommon, Oscoda and Crawford; Arenac, Iosco and Alcona; Alpena, Otsego and Montmorency; Cheboygan, Emmet and Presque Isle; Charlevoix, Antrim and Manitou; Grand Traverse and Kalkaska; Chippewa, Alger, Mackinac and Schoolcraft; Delta and Iron; Ontonagon, Baraga, Keweenaw and Isle Royal.

—Miss Cheney next Tuesday.

—The Blue and Gray next week Friday and Saturday.

—The new time card of G. R. & I. will go into effect about June 28th.

—W. W. Rice is erecting a large tannery north of Petoskey, the plant to cost $25,000.

—R. S. Hubbard who has been spending the winter at La Grange, Ind., has returned to Boyne.

—John Dillon, F. G. White and L. P. Hicks contemplate passing the season here with their families.

—Preaching at Black's school house next Sabbath at 3 o'clock. Presiding Elder Stinchcomb will be present.

—The G. R. & I. employes will come out in handsome new uniforms of blue, trimmed with white buttons this week.

—The G. R. & I. R. R. Co. are ornamenting their park at Petoskey with quantities of ornamental plants and flowers.

—A boat load of porcupine pelts arrived at Cross Village from the north shore the other day. The pelts sell readily at $1 each, the quills being used by the Indians in bark work.

—Elliot Carpenter of Wisconsin, is here visiting his cousin, Egbert Carpenter, accompanied by his wife. Mr. Carpenter is as much of an angler as his illustrious cousin. Yesterday he brought in a fine string of trout from Stover's creek.

—Charlevoix supervisors Friday voted to remove the county seat from Charlevoix to East Jordan, but before adjourning they also voted to submit at the next election a proposition to move the seat of local justice from East Jordan to Boyne City. What Charlevoix really wants is a portable county seat.—Detroit Journal.

—Man leaves home in morning in search of work, which he finds. Returns home to inquire of his wife where he can find the hoe. Finds a boarder occupying the place in his bed which he had left a few hours before. Man gets jealous. Trouble brews at once. Furniture is sold. House and lot sold. Man starts for California, and leaves wife and boarder to continue housekeeping. All happened at Boyne City, says the Statesman.

—In part payment for the interest Townsend, the veteran, argus-eyed state editor of the Daily Telegraph, evinces in our 'business trips,' we shall invite him to go trout fishing next fall to a stream where the briars are thickest, the banks are steepest, the logs are slipperiest, the foliage the densest and the trout the scarcest, in the whole region. He will be sorry he was ever born,—"that his ma ever married his pa."

—The discouraging condition of the iron market has compelled Mr. Otis to lay off the most of his men for thirty days, at least. It is not definitely known just when the furnace will start up, but we learn that Mr Otis has some contracts yet to fill, which will give the furnace a couple of months work this summer. Mr. Otis is away, now, and will endeavor to obtain more contracts although at present buyers are careful.—Mancelona Herald.

—Petoskey is making preparations for a grand celebration the Fourth. Gen. T. J. Thorp of Cadillac, who is said to be the only man who ever made a Fourth of July speech in Libby Prison will be the orator. Prize contests in jumping, racing, throwing the hammer, etc. An especially interesting feature of the day will be the prize drill for squads from Posts of the G. A. R. in northern Michigan. Capt. Bonfyeou is chairman of the committee on arrangements.

—President Hughart of the G. R. & I. has just returned from the north and says that the hotel and resort men are anticipating a great rush during the coming season. The road is in fair condition now and ready for the summer traffic. People throughout Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Illinois, Wisconsin and some of the states farther south, who patronize the resorts of northern Michigan expect a hot summer, and will make their usual summer stay "up north."—G. R. Democrat.

—Willie Boucher, a son of T. C. Boucher, of Marion, was seriously injured on Thursday at Nicholl's mill yard. He was assisting in putting logs into the boom, down the steep incline near the mill, and got in front of a large hardwood log which was moving expeditiously towards the water. It downed him and ran the whole length of his system. He was picked up for a badly hurt boy and carried to an adjoining residence, where an examination showed severe bruises, but no necessarily fatal injury. He is doing well.

The program of the press association which meets at Traverse City on July 6, is about as follows: Monday, 7 P. M.—business meeting of Western Michigan Press association; Tuesday, 10 A. M.—literary exercises of the Western Michigan Press association; Tuesday, 8 P. M.—joint banquet. On Wednesday at 7 A. M. the excursionists will leave Traverse City for Charlevoix for dinner, thence to Petoskey, where a banquet will help pass away the evening, and from there local excursions will be indulged in and the party return home.

—McOmber of Petoskey has shipped 2,300 bushels of potatoes to Cleveland.

—Harbor Springs, Harbor Point and Wequetonsing are soon to be connected by sidewalks.

—The Petoskey nine was downed Wednesday, by the Charlevoix boys in the tune of 15 to 17.

—R. Belwin, of Eveline, has a cat that is twenty six years old, and catches mice with as much energy as it did twenty five years ago. Just think of it, this cat was 10 years old when "Pug" Stockman was a kitten.

—Little Pearl Williams of Petoskey, has a future before her as a society young lady. She climbed up stairs all by herself to her sister's room, pierced her own ears with a darning needle, put in her sister's earings and came down stairs happy and proud, and with the pendents dripping with blood.

—On July 1 the following important changes will be made in the rates of postage: Any article in a newspaper or other publication may be marked for observation, except by written or printed words, without increase of postage. All newspapers sent from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers thereto, or to other news agents, shall be entitled to transmission at the rate of 1 cent per pound or fraction thereof, the postage to be prepaid.

The weight of all single-rate letters is increased from one-half of one ounce each or fraction thereof to one ounce. The same increase of weight is allowed for drop letters, whether mailed at stations where there is a free delivery or where carrier service is not established.

—Mr. Parkhurst's bill to prevent druggists from selling liquor as a beverage passed the house committee of the whole lately. It prohibits any druggist from selling liquor of any kind for other than medicinal, mechanical or scientific use. A druggist desiring to sell liquor for these purposes must obtain a permit from the judge of probate of his county, and his petition for such permit must be signed by at least twelve responsible citizens residing in the same city or township. The druggist must file a bond in the sum of $2,500 in places of less than 5,000 population the sum is made $1,000), with two of the signers of his petition as sureties. For the permit a fee of $2 must be paid. Liquor for medicinal purposes can only be sold on a physician's prescription, and no physician can issue a prescription until he has filed an affidavit with his probate judge that he will prescribe the liquor only in cases of necessity. When liquor is sold for mechanical or scientific purposes the purchaser must file an application, giving his name, residence and the purpose for which the fluid is to be used, supported by an affidavit as to the truth of the statements in the application. Druggists and physicians who violate the provisions of the bill are to be judged guilty of a misdemeanor and for the first offense may be punished by a fine of from $100 to $500, or imprisonment from thirty to ninety days, for the second offense the fine shall be from $200 to $500 or imprisonment from sixty to ninety days. Prosecuting attorneys are allowed $15 for each successful prosecution, the sum to be taxed as costs in the case.

Miss Cheney.

Miss Corinna Estelle Cheney, Michigan's most celebrated vocalist, will appear at the Charlevoix Opera House, next Tuesday evening, June 23. Go and hear her as this is a rare opportunity. See hand bills.

The Tournament.

The committee of arrangements are actively at work in perfecting the details that will certainly make the Base Ball Tournament of the Fourth, a grand success. The following are the prizes:

1st Prize—A Gold Medal and $50.00 in Money, and the Championship of the Grand Traverse Region.

3rd Prize—A Ball and Bat and $10.00 in Money.

The object of the tournament is to increase the interest in the game in the Grand Traverse region and to afford the boys an opportunity to become better acquainted. The medals are for something permanent to keep as a trophy to denote the 'Championship,' while the money prize will pay the expenses of the visiting clubs.

The medals must be won three times in succession before they become the property of the winning club. The conditions on which the medals are to be held and played for, will be determined by the Captains of all the clubs represented at the tournament. For convenience in future games only clubs belonging in the counties bordering on the Grand Traverse and Little Traverse Bays are to be included in the present tournament or future contests for Medals.

GRANT'S BOOK.

Extracts From General Grant's Forthcoming Book Dedicated to the American Soldier and Sailor.

The General Dissents From the Idea That Johnston Could Have Annihilated Him at Shiloh—The Battle of the Wilderness.

PERSONAL MEMOIRS.

NEW YORK, June 9.—The Commercial Advertiser publishes extracts from General Grant's forthcoming book which will be entitled "Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant." The book will be in two volumes of about 500 pages each. The first volume and nearly all the second are now written. The book will, it is claimed, contain the inside history of several important operations hitherto undivulged or incorrectly described. The dedication of the work is in the following words:

NEW YORK, May 23, 1885.

In describing his origin General Grant says he is of the eighth generation in descent from Matthew Grant, who came to America from Dorchester, Eng., in 1630, and settled at Dorchester, Mass. General Grant's great-grandfather, Noah Grant, was an officer in the English army in the war of 1756 against the French and Indians, and his grandfather, Noah Grant, fought in the Revolution against England.

General Grant was born at Point Pleasant, O. He received his appointment to West Point through Hon. Thomas Morris, Senator from Ohio. The fact that he had no early leaning toward a military life is shown by his at first wishing to refuse the appointment. His father, a tanner, told him to go, and he went. His reluctance arose from a fear that he would not pass the examination.

On May 24, 1861, General Grant wrote to the Adjutant General offering the Government his military service in any capacity. No notice was taken of the letter, and it is not preserved in the files of the War Department.

General Grant, in describing his first meeting with the enemy when he commanded a regiment, naively admits that he was very much frightened. On seeing the retreat of the opposing force, without awaiting attack, the idea struck him that their commander was probably as much frightened as he. This view of the matter remained in his mind, and he never thereafter felt trepidation in the presence of the enemy.

In his comments upon the much discussed battle of Shiloh General Grant dissents from the idea that if Johnston had not been killed the Confederates would have won and annihilated Grant's army. He remarks: "'Ifs' defeated the Confederates at Shiloh. We could have been disgracefully beaten 'if' all the bullets fired by us had passed harmlessly over the enemy and 'if' all of theirs had taken effect." * * * * * "The fact that Johnston was leading a brigade to induce it to make a charge which had been repeatedly ordered, is evidence that there was neither the universal demoralization on our side nor the unbounded confidence on theirs which has been claimed. There was in fact no time during the day when I doubted the eventual defeat of the enemy."

General Grant says that Colonel William Preston Johnston's description of the battle is very graphic and causes the reader to wonder why the Federal troops were not all killed. "I witnessed the fight," somewhat sarcastically says the General, "and I see but little in the description that I can recognize. The Confederates fought well and deserve commendation enough for their bravery and endurance on the 6th of April without detracting from their antagonists or claiming anything more than their due."

The General makes amends to General Anson McD. McCook by explaining a remark in his Century article on Shiloh, to the effect that McCook was unwilling to pursue the enemy on April 7 because of the condition of the troops. General Grant says the remarks has been misinterpreted. He sustained McCook and merely mentioned the fact as a matter of history. He then pays a high tribute to McCook's gallantry.

General Grant first met Mr. Lincoln when called to Washington to receive his commission as Lieutenant General, in March, 1864. "In my first interview with Mr. Lincoln alone, he stated to me that he had never professed to be a military man or to know how campaigns should be conducted, and never wanted to interfere with them, but that procrastination on the part of commanders, and the pressure of the people at the North and of Congress, which, like the poor, he had always with him, had forced him into issuing his well known series of executive orders. He did not know but they were all wrong, and did not know that some of them were. All he wanted, or had ever wanted, he said, was that some one would take the responsibility and act, and call on him for all the assistance needed."

General Grant first met Stanton at Louisville. Stanton handed him two orders, saying he could take his choice. Both created a military division of the Mississippi, giving General Grant command of it and were identical, except that one left the Department commanders as they were, while the other relieved Rosecrans and assigned Thomas to his place. "I accepted the latter," says Grant, "after Rosecrans' defeat at Chickamauga and retreat upon Chattanooga."

General Grant says Stanton sent for him and in great excitement told him that further retreat must be prevented. "I immediately wrote an order assuming command of the Division of the Mississippi and telegraphed it to General Rosecrans. I then telegraphed him the order from Washington, assigning to Thomas the command of the Army of the Cumberland, and to Thomas that he must hold Chattanooga at all hazards."

The following may be regarded as General Grant's reply to assertions that superior numbers gave him the final victory in the battle of the Wilderness:

"Operating in an enemy's country and supplied always from a distant base, large detachments had at all times to be sent from the front not only to guard the base of supplies and the roads leading to it, but all the roads leading to our flanks and rear. We were also operating in a country unknown to us, and without competent guides or maps showing the roads accurately. Estimating General Lee's strength in the same manner as ours, the enemy had not less than 80,000 men at the start. His reinforcements during the campaign were about equal to ours, deducting our discharged men and those sent back. Lee was on the defensive and in a country in which every stream, every road, every obstacle to the movement of troops, and every defense was familiar to him and his army. The citizens were all friendly and furnished him accurate reports of our every movement. Rear guards were not necessary for him, and having always a railroad at his back large wagon trains were not required. All circumstances considered we did not have any advantage of numbers.

"More severe fighting has not been witnessed on this continent than that of the 5th and 6th of May, 1864. Our victory consisted in having successfully crossed a formidable stream almost in the face of the enemy and in getting the army together again as a unit. We gained an advantage on the morning of the 6th which, if it had been followed up, must have proven very decisive. In the evening the enemy gained an advantage, but was speedily repulsed. As we stood at the close, the two armies were relatively in about the same condition [illegible] the battle of the Wilderness. Our losses in the Wilderness were 2,261 killed, 8,785 wounded, and 2,902 missing; probably nearly all the latter captured by the enemy."

In giving reminiscences of Lee's surrender, General Grant says: "I found General Lee had been brought into our lines and conducted to a house belonging to a Mr. McLean, and was there with one of his staff officers awaiting my arrival. The head of his column was occupying a hill, a portion of which was an apple orchard.

Wars produce many stories of fiction. The story of the apple tree is one of those fictions, with a slight foundation of fact. Running diagonally up the hill was a wagon road which at one point ran very near one of the trees of the orchard so that the wheels had cut off the roots of the tree which made a little embankment. General Babcock reported to me that when he first met General Lee he was upon this embankment with his feet in the road and leaning against the tree. It was then that General Lee was conducted into the house where I first met him. I had known General Lee in the old army and had served with him in the Mexican war, but did not suppose, owing to the difference in our ages and rank, that he would probably remember me, while I would remember him more distinctly because he was the Chief Engineer of the Staff of General Scott in the Mexican war.

When I had left camp that morning I had not expected the result so soon that was then taking place, and consequently was in rough garb, and, I believe, without a sword, as I usually was when on horseback on the field, wearing a soldier's blouse for a coat, with shoulder-straps of my rank to indicate who I was to the army.

When I went into the house I found General Lee. We greeted each other, and after shaking hands took our seats. What his feelings were I do not know—being a man of much dignity and with an impenetrable face—but my own feelings, which had been quite apparent on the receipt of his letter, were sad and depressed. I felt like anything rather than rejoicing at the downfall of a foe that had fought so long and gallantly and had suffered so much for a cause which I believed to be one of the worst for which a people ever fought, and for which there was not the least pretext. I do not question, however, the sincerity of the great mass of those who were opposed to us. General Lee was dressed in full uniform, entirely new, and wearing a sword of considerable value, very likely the sword that had been presented by the State of Virginia. At all events, it was an entirely different sword from the one that would ordinarily be worn in the field.

In my rough traveling suit, which was the uniform of a private with the straps of a General, I must have contrasted strangely with a man so handsomely dressed, six feet high and of faultless form. But this was not a matter that I thought of until afterwards.

General Lee and I soon fell into conversation about old army times. He remarked that he remembered me very well in the old army. Our conversation grew so pleasant that I almost forgot the object of our meeting. General Lee was accompanied by one of his staff, a Colonel Marshall. I had all of my staff with me, a good portion of whom were in the room during the whole of the interview."

THE CONSCIENCE FUND.

Letter Received at Treasury Department Which Tells a Remarkable Story.

BOSTON, June 9.—A Washington special to the Herald states that on Saturday, the correspondent of that paper was shown, at the Treasury Department, a letter sent in, with a large sum of money, for the conscience fund, which told the following remarkable story:

The writer was a telegraph operator who, in 1866, was a passenger in the steamship Henry Chauncey, from New York to San Francisco. During the voyage a friendship sprung up between he and a fellow passenger who called himself Charles Edmund Hastings. On reaching his destination the operator went to work for the California State Telegraph Company. On his first day of service he received a telegram from the chief inspector of the Postoffice Department, warning the authorities in San Francisco to look out for one Charles Emmons, who, while employed at the New York postoffice, had stolen $5,000. The description given convinced the operator that Emmons and Hastings were identical, and on the impulse of the moment he slipped the telegram in his pocket, and afterward gave it to Hastings, who confessed and promised reform if his secret was kept. A few months later he died in Nevada City.

The letter ends as follows: "A few years ago, by the death of a relative, I came into possession of what, to a man of my modest desires, is an ample fortune. I desire, therefore, to make restitution to the government of Mr. Emmon's peculations in which I considered myself an indirect accomplice. The sum enclosed is the amount of principal and interest to date."

TERRIFIC GAS EXPLOSION.

The Breckerlee Hat Factory at Danbury, Conn., Blown to Pieces by an Explosion—Seven Dwellings Burned and Eight Men Injured.

DANBURY, June 8.—An explosion of gas occurred at the hat factory of Breckerlee & Co., at four o'clock Saturday afternoon, causing the total destruction of the factory, seven dwellings and the Breckerlee hose house. Eight men were seriously burned, and there were many narrow escapes from death. There were over 400 operatives in the building at the time of the explosion. Eighteen families are rendered homeless. The fire department of Bethel and a steamer and hose company from Norwalk arrived by a special.

This is the most disastrous fire ever experienced in Danbury. William Breckerlee, Sr., a partner in the firm, is dangerously injured. It is thought that he cannot recover. The loss is $150,000; insurance $90,000.

The firm employs about 500 hands. Of those in the factory at the time of the explosion, all are accounted for save a lady trimmer, quite deaf, who has not been heard from, and one other. A finisher reports dragging the body of a man who had fainted to the head of the stairs, where he had to let him go to save himself.

The flames spread with great rapidity and the buildings, which covered nearly an acre of ground, were in a mass of flames in less than fifteen minutes. The seven dwellings were worth $2,500 each and were owned by the firm and occupied by the employes.

Confesses That He Perjured Himself.

CHICAGO, June 9.—Charles Gilmore, who has been lying in the county jail since February 16, under a charge of perjury in the Mackin election fraud cases, has at last confessed that he perjured himself, and has made affidavit to the fact. The substance of the affidavit is that he was employed to go to the Second precinct of the Eighteenth ward and look for a professional engraver who worked there and bring him to the Palmer House. He found him, but after communicating to him Mackin's message, the engraver refused to have anything to do with counterfeiting the tickets. Gilmore says that the evidence given by him was false in every particular, and that Mackin [illegible]

EX-GOVERNOR HALE'S FAILURE.

Alleged That He Fleeced His Friends by Unloading Worthless Mining Stock Upon Them—An Interview With the Ex-Governor.

BOSTON, June 10.—The Herald yesterday morning said Boston business men are not wanting who rejoice in ex-Governor Hale's downfall, and who speak of him as one who has fleeced his friends by unloading worthless mining stock upon them. On the representation of a mining agent of Hale's, one Tregelow, the Monarch mine, in Idaho, was bought by Hale for, as is alleged, a nominal sum, although Hale claimed to have paid $100,000 for it. Astonishing reports of the richness of the mine were afterwards circulated in Boston, backed up by ore of surpassing richness, sent east to Tregelow. A large quantity of the stock was floated here and in New York, and a mill costing $80,000 was erected at the mine.

From the investment there has never been any return. A subsequent investigation by an expert showed that in order to make the Monarch of any value the purchase of two adjacent mines was necessary. The mines were bought and the three were consolidated under the name of the Tremont mine.

It is said that the property is valuable, but the company exhausted its funds before realizing any profit. The stock has tumbled from two dollars a share to almost nothing. It is said that Hale made $100,000 by this transaction and that he made a like sum by promoting the War Eagle mine enterprise, the mine having been worked out before coming into Hale's possession. The losers in these ventures freely say that they were victimized.

A Herald reporter on Monday interviewed Governor Hale, at his residence in Keene, N. H. The latter was unprepared to make a formal statement of his affairs, but would say that many untrue assertions had been made which, at some time, he would refute. In reply to the statement that his wealth had been far less than was claimed, Mr. Hale said that four years ago he was worth $400,000 clear of indebtedness. He had lost his money by the shrinkage of values and unprofitable speculations; for example $27,500 had been sunk in the Lima, Ohio, Car Company, and $100,000 in the Lebanon Woolen Company.

The ex-Governor denied that he had overstated the value of his property. He had given to a business agency a schedule of his holdings, with a statement of the par value of the stocks, and saying at the time that their market value could be learned on the street. The ex-Governor attributes the bitter enmity against him partly to his participation in politics. An inspection by the reporter of the attachments on file, in Keene against Hale's property, shows that several of the writs charge Hale with obtaining various sums of money upon false representations that he was worth over $500,000, clear of all indebtedness.

A FATAL QUARREL.

A Deadly Encounter Grows Out of a Law Suit—Two Killed and One Wounded.

LIVINGSTONE, Ky., June 10.—At Berea, Ky., on Monday, a quarrel arose between William Harris and Mitchell Preston, James Johnston and John T. Disney. Harris and Johnston were both instantly killed in the fight, and Preston received probably fatal wounds. The origin of the trouble was that Harris and Johnston were both selling whisky, contrary to the local option law, Harris acting as agent for some illicit distillery in Kentucky, and through some misunderstanding between them they were unable to make a settlement between themselves. By mutual agreement, the matter was taken before the Judge at Richmond. Preston was a witness in behalf of Harris, and Johnston testified in his own cause. Their stories differed and Preston got badly tangled up by Johnston's attorney. The suit was decided in Johnston's favor. After the case ended, Johnston came home. Harris and Preston also returned to Berea and drank heavily until Sunday morning, when they went to the house of Johnston and called for him, but he was not at home. Mrs. Johnston communicated the fact to her husband that he was being searched for by his two enemies, and he kept away from the place. Harris and Preston watched the house all day. Mrs. Johnston then went to a railroad tunnel, where Johnston was concealed, and begged him to keep away from the house, but he insisted upon going there, leaving his wife at the tunnel. When half-way home, he met Harris and Preston. Harris at once asked him what he meant by swearing to those d—d lies Saturday. Johnston replied that he had sworn to the truth. At this Harris drew his revolver, but Johnston was too quick for him and shot him just behind the left ear, killing him instantly. In the meantime Preston began firing, and one of his bullets struck Johnston in the forehead, penetrating the brain and causing instant death. John T. Disney, who was near Johnston, fired several shots at Preston, one of which took effect in Preston's thigh. The parties were considered lawless and desperate men.

DESTRUCTIVE WATERSPOUT.

A Water-Spout Occurs at Lagos, Mexico, Doing an Immense Amount of Damage—Over 200 Lives Lost.

EL PASO, TEX., June 10.—At Lagos, Mexico, the loss of life and property by the water-spout that occurred on the 6th inst., proves to be greater than at first reported. At Puebla Ciaranta, for instance, the rushing waters rose within a few minutes more than twenty-five feet. This tremendous flood swept everything before it, and at that place alone over 200 lives were lost.

Another large city suffered Monday night by water-spout. Guanajuato was flooded and a great deal of property destroyed. The water-spout first burst at Presa, about a mile above the city, the center of which soon had six feet of water in its streets.

That evening a complimentary amateur performance in honor of Governor and ex-President Gonzales was given at the theater and the building was crowded. When the alarm was sounded, about 10:30, a wild panic ensued in the building that beggared description. Many people were injured.

The loss to property is estimated at $100,000 at least. The principal sufferers are D. Hugo & Co., Lorenzo Marquez and the Singer Sewing Machine Company. It is not known yet how many lives have been lost.

The Liquor Tax Will Not be Refunded.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, June 10.—The Supreme Court yesterday morning rendered decisions in the Cuyahoga County cases involving the right of saloonkeepers to recover money paid into the treasury under the Scott law. The judgment of the court was affirmed, and the money will not be refunded. The decision has been looked forward to with considerable interest, as it involves a large sum of money, and had the decision been in favor of the liquor men it would have placed several counties and municipal corporations in a financial predicament, as the money paid into the treasuries under the Scott law had all been spent. This decision virtually makes the Scott law constitutional.

ELEMENTAL FURIES.

A Water-Spout Sweeps Through a Mexican Valley—Over a Hundred Lives Lost—Extensive Damage to Crops and Other Property in Wisconsin, Iowa and Elsewhere.

EL PASO, TEX., June 8.—A water-spout burst in the mountains about eight leagues east of Lagos, Mexico, Sunday near the dividing line between the States of Guanajuato and Jalisco. Immense quantities of water swept down the mountains with irresistible force toward the well-populated plains and valleys below, and left desolation and ruin in their wake. There are already one hundred lives reported lost, and it is feared the list may be swelled still larger when all the details are known. A great many houses were swept away. Steps have been taken in Lagos among the wealthy manufacturing classes to alleviate the pressing wants of many who escaped from the valleys but lost everything.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., June 9.—Dispatches from various parts of the State show great damage done to fruit trees and crops by a violent hail-storm Sunday. Trees are entirely stripped of their foliage in Dane, Jefferson, LaCrosse, Richland, Vernon and other counties. At Lake Geneva every conservatory, including those of N. K. Fairbank and L. Z. Leiter, of Chicago, was entirely wrecked. One florist's loss there amounted to one thousand dollars, and thousands of panes of glass were broken. In many towns there is no window-glass to be had, the demand being far in excess of the supply.

LA CROSSE, Wis., June 9.—The villages of New Albion and Victory, forty miles south of this city, were almost destroyed on Sunday by a tornado. The tornado struck New Albion from the northwest about one o'clock. The railway elevator, school-house and seven residences were leveled in an instant. The fronts of all business blocks were broken in, twenty houses unroofed and many barns blown out of sight. Four people were injured, one child dangerously. The school-house, a fine two-story frame building, was raised high in the air and crushed to splinters when it fell. The loss to New Albion and vicinity is $30,000. Victory is a village containing about fifty houses. All were wrecked or damaged. Loss, $10,000. No one was killed, but several were slightly hurt. The tornado lasted nine minutes. Crops were badly damaged. Reports of great damage from hail and wind in Southern Minnesota continue to pour in, with unlimited orders for glass.

DUBUQUE, Ia., June 8.—A cyclone, with a heavy rain and hail-storm, struck this city from the west Sunday night. The school-house was picked up and smashed to atoms. The St. Paul warehouse, operated by McMichael Bros., and containing fifteen hundred bushels of grain was blown over on the railroad track. Erickson & Sarli's lumber was blown all over town, some pieces being sent flying through windows, and others going through dwellings. Charles Arndt's barn, wagon, two buggies and a cutter were completely demolished. Ludke's dwelling, Mrs. Coreny's dwelling and Mr. Stonn's dwelling were razed to the ground. The German Church was moved off its foundation and warped badly. Mr. Ludke had two children hurt, one having an arm broken and the other being bruised in the body and limbs, not seriously. These are about all the injuries to persons. The sorghum mill owned by F. S. Davis was completely wrecked, about twenty barns were demolished, and all the fronts in the business part of town were injured by flying timbers. The storm lifted loaded cars from the side-track and blew them off the track. The tornado raged about thirty minutes. The loss will reach $30,000.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—An examination of the Washington Monument confirms the report that the capstone had been shattered by lightning. A break was made by the lightning at the northeast corner of the capstone, and four fragments fell to the ground, where they were found yesterday, nearly forty feet from the base of the monument. The engineer in charge is at the top of the shaft carefully inspecting the injury to the stone. To repair the damage will require the re-setting of several stones.

ST. THOMAS, ONT., June 9.—A heavy thunder-storm passed over this section Sunday evening, causing considerable damage. The wind and lightning were terrific. A house in the east end of the city, occupied by a family named Ryan, was struck by lightning, which entered through the chimney, and passed through the room where Mrs. Ryan was sitting, striking and instantly killing her. A man named Stillson was knocked down in the street and severely wounded.

BALTIMORE, MD., June 9.—A special from Woodstock, Va., says: A hurricane, accompanied by a water-spout, struck this place at 6:45 Sunday night, unroofing the Methodist Church and blowing down fences and trees. The streets were flooded by the rain. No such storm has been known here in the memory of the oldest citizen. At least ten thousand dollars' damage was done in the town.

A NIGHT OF TERROR.

Terrible Experience of a Boating Party from Cleveland—Clinging to a Capsized Yacht for Ten Hours.

CLEVELAND, O., June 9.—Sunday afternoon A. B. Damscomb, James Blessing, Fred Brooks, Al Harney and J. Z. Bayliss started from Colts, five miles east of here, in a small sloop-yacht for a sail about eight o'clock in the evening. When about three miles from shore a sudden squall struck the boat, capsizing it and throwing the men into the water. A heavy blow followed, and the sea ran high. The men got hold of the boat, and there clung throughout the long hours of the night. About six o'clock yesterday morning Henry Saunders, at Gordon's Park, saw the wreck about a mile off shore, and put out to it in a small boat. On nearing the wreck a pitiable scene was presented. Fred Brooks was apparently dead, and was held up by his comrades. Young Blessing had been driven mad by the exposure, and was delirious. His companion, Harney, kept a tight hold on him, and saved him from drowning. The three conscious survivors were nearly exhausted, and would have perished had not help come just when it did. The unfortunate yachtmen were taken ashore. Fred Brooks died shortly after reaching home. Blessing is in a precarious condition and may die at any moment. The other three are very much exhausted and suffering from symptoms which indicate pneumonia.

The Federal Loss.

WASHINGTON, June 9.—Adjutant-General Drum, U. S. A., has just completed a list of casualties in the Federal army during the late war. The list is thought to be the most accurate yet published. The aggregate number of death is shown to have been 359,496. Of these, 29,498 occurred among Union soldiers held as prisoners of war. The total number of troops reported as furnished by various States under various calls is 2,771,408. Some of the returns were duplicated, and it is estimated that the actual number was about 2,500,000.

Tommy— [illegible] that's his name,
An' [illegible] it'll be the same
[illegible] I live. He's jist thirteen;
But a smarter boy waz never seen.
He kin read, an' write, an' figger, an'—my
He kin wi[illegible] wash me an' not half try!
W'y, sir, w'en he woz only three
He'd set up here 'long side o' me
An' listen. I'll I had to say
In sich a cur'ous, comical way
That I'd laff an' holler till I got so sore
I couldn't holler enny more,
An' his mother, too, she'd chuckle and grin
An' hol[illegible] an' weave 'er chin
Back'ards an' for'ards—here an' there
Like a bunch o' good humor see-sawin' the air.
Oh, he woz smart for a little chap—
Come out rat you see—from mother's pap!
But 'ith out enny jokin—he's smarter'n me,
An' there's where his mother 'n I allus agree.
Pale? Yes, a little an' kind o' slim,
An' I reckon that's w'y we've thot more o' him
Than of the rest. We love him better 'n we do our souls,
An' I 'spect w'en the tide o' eternity rolls
Down our way, an' mother 'n me
In death's undertow are carried to sea—
Our last thot's 'll be o' that boy.

Tommy's fifteen an' I've sent him to school
Whare he wanted to go, for I don't b'lieve in the old fashioned rule
O' bringin' boys up ez we hev been bro't,
Ner in teachin 'em things ez we hev been [illegible]
But I don't love to givin' 'em all a fair show,
An' lettin' 'em foller when their min's want to go.
At least that's my ideas, be they right or wrong,
An' if I've bren mistaken, Tommy, 'fore long
Will show jist how much an' show in what way.
Fer he's been gone a year, jist to a day.
Tis kinder lonesome w'en he's not at home,
'An' a year's a long time, but w'en he does come
I'll jist be so happy an' feel that proud
That the lightest, high floatin', mere speck of a cloud
Wont be enny lighter'n I'll feel.

III.

Tommy's at home an' he's come home t' stay,
But w'[illegible] got here, all the brightness o' day
Fer mother 'n me faded right out o' sight—
'Peared to melt right away, an' the middle o' night
Couldn't be enny darker, ner filled 'ith more gloom
Than the space that's inclosed in that air little room.
It shouldn't be so, 'cos Tommy's in there;
But it's no place for me, an' the hot, scorch in' air
Which comes thro' that door jist makes me that weak
That I can't hardly stand—I don't try t' speak.
My heart all the time feels heavy ez lead,
An' things are all twisted roun' in my head,
My throat keeps a swellin', an' my eyes git dim
'Till tears I can't he'p w'en I think about him.
The house is that quiet an' solum' an' still
It don't seem like home, an' I'm 'fraid never will.
Evermore. The birds act like they woz sorry for me,
Fer they aint a bit wild like they're us'n to be,
An' the low, purty tones they keeps tryin' t' sing,
To me [illegible] got the same musical ring.
They [illegible]. Even the leaves and the long way o' grass
Seem to know suthin's wrong, for they bend ez I pass.
For me everything 's wrong, an' a suthin' inside
All the time keeps a hoomin': "Too much airth'ly pride
In any one thing must be humbled."

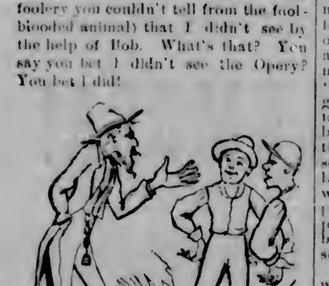
AT THE OPERA.

A Man From "Georgy" Sees the "Bohemian Gal."

Of all the sightly places in this subloonary spear New York is the sightliest, and by the help of my friend Bob Tompkins I saw all there was to see. It will always be a livin', growin' consolation to me that thar wasn't a monkey nor none that acted like 'em (and a plenty thar was which for antics and foolery you couldn't tell from the foolblooded animal) that I didn't see by the help of Bob. What's that? You say you bet I didn't see the Opery? You bet I did!



What Opery did I see? I see the Opery of the Bohemian Gal. How did I like it? Well, I liked it pretty tolerble, not out and out; the fact is they spiled it by overdoin' the singin' part. You know yourself the way to spite a thing is to overdo it, and that's jes what they does in the Opery. They overdoes it. The fiddlin' and drummin' is fine. The actin' is beautiful, and the rooms is fixed up splendid; but the singin' is overdone. But I am makin' a transgression, as the preachers say.

You see, I went to New York on a sight-seein' expedition. I had made a fine cotton crop, and my wife said she would go and stay at her mother's with the baby, and I could go and see the world; so I went right to New York, and I saw it. Bob he stuck to me, and put me right through. Well, I thought I must have seen everything that was to be seen, and I was tired, and could go home with a clar conscience, when Bob come to me and sez,

"La, Jack! I like to let you go home without seein' the best thing in New York."

"What's that?" sez I, surprised, not to say discouraged.

"Why, it's the Opry of the Bohemian Gal. I tell you she's beautiful, she is!" sez Bob.

"Now look here, Bob Tompkins," sez I, "I'm a married man, and I'm goin' back to my wife able to answer any question she may put without shrinkin', and I ain't goin' to see no gal, however beautiful, be she Bohemian or be she Dutch."

Well Bob at that commenced rollin' round and laughin' and screechin' like he had a fit of some kind. I see I had made a mistake, and I was slightly afraid I had looked green, which, on [illegible]

"Well, Bob, I'm glad to see you can take a joke; 'tain't every man can; but, jokin' aside, who is this here Bohemian gal, and what colored Opery has she got?"

At that Bob lost his breath laughin', and the tears fairly rolled down his cheeks. Then I got mad, which any man would a done under like circumstances. Sez I:

"Bob Tompkins, if you don't stop skirmishin' round thar like a monkey, and tell me what under heaven you're a makin' a fool of yourself about, I'll up and knock you inter the middle of next week."

Well, Bob drawed up when he found my feelins was hurt, and said, while he was a wipin' his eyes:

"Oh, Jack! you blade of grass, you. Barnum ought to have you for a circus; you'd dror sure. A Opery is a play-actin' thing set to music, and the Bohemian Gal is the name of the Opery, just like 'Oh, Susanna,' and 'My Mary Ann.'"

"Well, why couldn't you say so at first," sez I, "without makin' a fool of yourself?"

Bob he apologized, and we shook hands and made up and I asked him to go to the Opery with me and I would stand treat; but he said he had a engagement, and I must excuse him. Then I asked him whar I was to go. He said to the Academy of Music. Sez I: "Ef this here show is a school show, I will not go; I have had enough, in my life, of children exhibitin', and as I haven't got no New York stock in that line, neither duty nor pleasure will draw me."

Bob like to a bust out larfin agin, but choked it back with sech power that he risked a apoplexy.

"Oh, Jack," sez he, "it ain't no school; they is Italian men and women, and you won't understand what they sez, unless you read a library before you go."

"Thar it is agin," sez I: "read a library! Why don't you tell me to build a house in five minutes? How big is your library? I ain't so much at readin', anyhow."

Bob choked agin, but didn't say a word; just went to a book stall and bought a pamphlet, which it looked like a tract, about as big as Allen's Alarm to the Unconverted, and he told me to take it home and read it, and that was the story they was goin' to sing at the Opery. And it's well I did read the American side of it, for of all the foolish gibberish that Italien takes the lead.

After I had eat my supper I went off to the Academy of Music, and thar was the ticket man settin' up in his stove box, and he sez, "You want a ticket, sir?"

Sez I: "That's about what I come for." I was very dignified, 'cause I had Georgy on my shoulders, and determined to be a honor to my State, and, above all things, not to look green. I s'pose the ticket man thought I was pretty stuck up, for he sez, as impudent as you please:

"Will you have a cheer or a box?"

Ef I could have got at him I would have knocked him down then and thar, but not bein' able, I used my sarcastic vain on him and said: "I'd have you for to know, sir, I am a gentleman from the State of Georgy, and we sets on cheers down thar, and leaves the boxes to the people from New York."

To all appearance sarcasm run off of that man like water off of a duck's back. He only grinned, and showed off to advantage a full set of store teeth, which must have cost a sight of money. He throwed me a ticket, and told me to go in at the door he pinted out. But law me! them people haven't any manners. A man at the door took my ticket away from me without sayin' "by your leave," and tore it in two and gave me back half, and before I could take it out on him for his rudeness a boy seized that and dragged me off by the arm down a passage between the seats, which was all folded neatly up like they had just come in from the wash. He unfolded one of these, pushed me in, and throwed my little piece of ticket after me, and was gone before you could say "Jack Robinson."

It seemed a pretty hard case that with people insultin' him right and left a Georgy man couldn't get a chance to knock one of 'em down. But so it was, and I tried to kind a devirt my thoughts from my aggravations by lookin' round. It certainly was a sightly place, and what with the big chandeleer up in the ceilin', and the little chandeleers all around, it sorter looked like a sunshiny day; and then the lights glitterin' on the diamonds and pearls and chalcedonies and jacinths that was hangin' round the women would a put the foundations of the celestial city out o' countenance. The men was mostly bald headed and wared swallow tail coats, and men and women was armed with double barrel spy glasses, which they gave them a comical appearance. Some of these said spy glasses was so large in proportion to the men that they looked like steam engines with a double light. One little bald headed gentleman sitting next to me had the biggest pair in the house. He actually looked as if he was hitched on to them instead of them being hitched on to him; and again, as I turned my eyes on his white bald head with the machinery in front it might have been mistaken for a bomb shell, and the idea came into my head that a slight tap would explode him. I had a mind to try it on him, but being a stranger in a strange land, I thought I had better keep quiet or I might get myself arrested for a dynamiter. Up in the top of the room was hanging a tremenjuous curting, with fine pictures on it, and just on the floor close to it was a row of candles, which seemed to be set down in a trough, sorter, with the wicks above the floor. In front of the candles was what looked like a music school, the schoolmaster sitting up on a high three-legged stool with a big stick in his hand, though it did look to me as if them boys was too old to be whipped. There was every kind of musical instrument you ever heard of. There was drums as big as hogsheads, altogether reminded me of that consort of Nebuchadnazzars we read of in the Holy Bible, and I have no doubt that they had the sackbut, psaltary, dulcimer, and so forth, among the machinery I didn't know the names of.

Well, while I was a workin' out these here thoughts the old music teacher give his stick a waft, as much as to say, "Now, my fine fellows, do your best, or you'll get a taste of this." And I tell you they went at it neck and heel, each one of 'em tryin' to beat the other. I never heard such a din. It was like happenin' in at a menagerie at feedin' time, and all the lions, tigers, hyenas and Jackasses was bellowing at one and the same time; and the old music teacher he swung that stick a threatening them old boys, until it seemed like he got so wore out he could jest manage to move it soft like; and believe me as soon as them boys see he was sorter disabled they took a rest, too, and the noise got lesser and lesser, till you could hear only the little baby whistle, and it sounded real sweet. Ef it had jest lasted a minute longer I think I might have caught that chune, if there was one; but the old man got up his wind too soon, and away they all went again like a pack of hounds in full cry. At last human natur' couldn't stand no more, and they blowed and beat themselves clean out, the school-master dropped his stick, and the boys fell back breathless, and before they could get up more steam the curting went up and the Opery began.

You want to hear the story, does you? Well, it was pretty, but ef I hadn't read that library I never would have knowed what they was after.

You see there was a widower Count with a name sounded like it was Arnold or something, and it had a pretty little gal which her name was Arleenner, and she and her nurse was in the room with him when the curting goes up, and the Count begins to sing how sorry he is his wife is dead, and how he loves his baby. Jest think of that, singin' all that, and liftin' up the little gal and kissin' her to music! Who ever heard tell of sich nonsense? Do you suppose if my wife was dead I would go and sing to a thousand or so people to tell 'em how sorry I was, and how I loved my baby? No; it's agin nater from beginnin' to end. Well, as soon as he got through he went away, and the nurse takes the little gal up in the mountains to pick flowers. They had hardly got out before here came a big fat Polisher named Thaddeus. He was a wailer, too. The Count wailed in a voice most fine enough for a woman, but Thaddeus was a base wailer; it sounded like thunder, and he sung first in the lower part of his chist, and I thought it was morally impossible he could go any lower, when he jumped right down to the lower part of his stomach, and before you had time to wonder how he could do it, there was his voice way down in the sides of his boots. It certainly was a fenominer how he could do it. Well, his wail was all about his country, how he had been banished, and if he went back he would have his head cut off, and all that. It would a been real distressin' ef it had only been natural for him to cry and groan and grunt to music. Jest as he finished his story, here came in a party of Gipsies, running in that sudden from all the openin's of the stage that it took away my breath. They rushed right up to Thaddeus and was going to kill him then and thar to the sound of music, when ther Captain, which had the name of Devilshoof (a bad name that for an honest man) he saw Thaddeus was a soldier and stopped the killin'. Thaddeus sung 'em a history of his troubles, and then they all broke out like a house afire screechin' at him: "A Gypsy's life is the life to lead," and they rung the changes on that noble sentiment 'till Thaddeus lost his head entirely, and said he would jine to 'em, and then and thar they put on his Gypsey clothes.

In another minute thar was another lung tearin', ear bustin' blowouts. Men, women and children rushed in singin' at the top of their voices that the Count's little gal and her nurse had been eat up by a wild animal in the mountain. Then there came the Count singin' how sorry he was. I was fairly out of patience with his unnaturalness, instead of runnin' out to save his child, to walk up and down before all them people singin'. I ain't no sort of patience with dead beats. Thaddeus had more sense; he picked up a gun which was lying handy, and away he went. Them mountains and wild beasts must have been right at the door, for Thaddeus was hardly gone before he was back again with the baby in his arms, he havin' been to the mountains, killed the wild beast, and saved the baby and nurse in not more than three minutes. He was a sight quicker than the patent exterminator. Well, then ther was another ear bustin', lung tearin' blow-outs. The Count embraced and kissed the baby to music, and sent her off to the nurse to have a little scratch on her arm tied up, which was all the hurt she had, which it shows you can't believe anything you hears. The report was that baby and nurse was eat up; the nurse wasn't hurt, and the baby had a flea-bite. I doubt myself if there was any wild beast in the matter all to get up a sensation. But the Count be- [illegible] Thaddeus sung he didn't keer if he did.

Then, as bad luck would have it, the Count purposed the health of the Emperor, which was the same which had banished Thaddeus, and Thaddeus dashed his glass down and broke it all to pieces, which made the Count so mad he forgot all about what Thaddeus had done, and had him arrested then and thar, and Devilshoof, too; but Devilshoof was too smart for 'em; he got hold of the baby, and every body took after him, but he ran across a bridge, and took a little knife out of his pocket and jest cut it down after him, and the curting come down, while the people fairly yelled and clapped their hands and tried to outdo the Opery in noise.

Then the little man next to me, which was bald headed and had the prize spy glasses, took 'em down and wiped 'em, and said, settlin' himself, "It will be twelve years before the next scene."

I was perfectly dumbfoundered at his sayin' such a thing, and I sez, sez I: "Is that a joke, sir? for I can't stay here no twelve years. I am from Georgy, and my wife and child are there, and I've got my livin' to make."

"Well," he swelled up like he would bust, and the lady next him laughed right out loud. He was very polite though, and told me they was goin' to pertend it was twelve years, and Arleenner would be growed up: and sure enough when it went up thar she was—leastways they wanted me to believe it was the same which was asleep on a fur skin; and thar was Thaddeus watchin' over her, and then she woke up, and they began to sing love at each other. And it was real pretty too: more chune about it than anything I had heard from 'em, only Thaddeus was too old and fat for her. When she first woke up she sung to him about a dream she had dreamed, all about how she lived in a fine house built of marble, and had plenty of niggars to wait on her, and fine clothes and jewelry and everything she wanted, but how she didn't keer about any of it cause he was there and loved her, and she truly did look pretty and sung beautiful. It made me think of the time my wife and me were courtin', only we didn't sing—may be because we couldn't. And then he kissed and hugged her, which if ther had not been so many people round would have been very natural. Then he sung how when she was a baby he had saved her life, and he showed her the scar on her arm.

But they don't rest easy long in Operies. This was too pretty and soft to last. The Gipsy Queen was in love with Thaddeus, and when she found he was sparkin' Arleenner, she laid a plan against 'em. She made out how Arleenner had stole a locket belongin' to the Count, and she was arrested and taken before him, and it was proved aginst her, and they was just about to put her in jail, when the Count saw the scar on her arm, and knowed it was his lost child; and then come another bustin' fuss. The Count sung he was so glad, and Arleenner sung so was she. And he sung he was goin' to marry her to the King's son, and she put her pretty arms around Thaddeus, and sung she wouldn't marry anybody but him, and the Count sung she couldn't marry a Gipsy, and Thaddeus up and drawed out a paper and said that proved he wasn't no Gipsy, but a big man in his own country; and so the Count gave his consent; and you thought all was goin' straight at last, when in came that Gipsy Queen with a Gipsy she had hired to kill Arleenner, and, as good luck would have it, he missed his aim and killed the Queen. And I felt like jumping up and cracking my heels together, I was so glad, she was such an awful shrieker, and hateful, besides. And then that was all.

I think if I live thirty years I will never get all that music out of my head. I've got as good an ear for music as anybody, but it would take twenty ears to hold all that. If they would only talk some and sing some. "What is more beautiful than music?" some folks asks, and it seems a question which poses the world; but I'll tell you nachure is, and it is agin nachure to sing everything. Now take sich an every day sentiment as this: "Will you come to supper, your Excellency?" How much better to say the thing right off than for half a dozen people to make a jewett of it, and squall the changes on it, and roll and pitch it round like it was a ball they was playin' with, and all the appetite his Excellency had is sung out of him! I say it's ridickelous nonsense. It's like what they call the 'toning in church whar they sings and whines the prayers to God Almighty. It's all agin nachure. Love songs is beautiful, and serenades will fetch the hardest hearts, but I say mix in the singin' with a little common sense talkin' and it would be a improvement all round.

Why, any body happenin' into one of them opperys, without being prepared by readin' a library, would think they had got into a lunatic asylum—to see four or five men and women screechin' at each other, ther hands flyin' out from ther chists (which let me say is a invariable movement), stretchin' of their necks until it is agonizin' to see the bones and sinews stand out, and ther mouths so wide open that you expect every minute to hear ther jaw bones crack. And then the chorus!—that is the worst of all; fifty or a hundred men and women dressed in the most outlandish way, each tryin' to outyell the other, and add to all this the determination of the music onera in the grand finally not to be outdone by the singers. They all get so wound up the fact is they can't stop themselves. The man with the big fiddle fairly turns a sumersault over it a tryin' to get first, and the little fiddlers saws away until it is enough to wake up the ghosts of the cats which was made into fiddle strings; and the big drummers and middle sized and little drummers is bent upon nothin' else but beatin' a hole in their instruments, and the horn [illegible] smashin' everything to pieces, and all comes down together with a Blim! blam! blum!! b-r-r-r-rum!!! and you look up thinkin' of course the roof is gone and the moon and stars shinin' overhead.

Maybe if I had studied it when I was a new born infant, and kept at it stiddy till now, I might like the Grand Opery. As it is it is too much for me.—Mary Tucker Magill, in Harper's Magazine.

A WILD GARDEN.

How a Gay Deceiver From Deceiverville Played It On the Wife of His Bosom.

Cooper lives on Jefferson street, in a nice house, which has a garden attached—a small garden about twenty feet one way by seventeen feet the other. For years this garden has gone to waste. Many a time has that man's wife tried to get him to plant something in the garden, but he would put her off with some excuse, such as a lack of time to devote to agricultural pursuits, the scarcity of farm hands, high price of seeds, or something. The good lady doted on beautiful lawns and grassy slopes, and it annoyed her to see that piece of ground producing nothing at all. She told Cooper that he was growing too stout and needed exercise, and working an hour or two of a morning in the garden would be worth more to him than all the doctors in the world. Along in the winter Cooper promised his wife, after she had spoken to him several times about the waste land in the yard, that if his life was spared another season he would cultivate that lawn, and make it blossom, and Mrs. C. was happy. He said he would raise grass for his neighbor's cows, and have a little artificial lake stocked with fish. Of course the small spot of ground did not give Cooper a chance to spread himself as he would have liked to, but he did the best he could. One day in early spring he was in the St. Paul Railway's general offices, and noticed glass jars filled with all kinds of seeds, which were an exhibit from Dakota, intended to display to the emigrant and paralyze him so he would buy land in Dakota. Cooper looked at the seeds and asked Mr. Heafford if he couldn't have some of them to plant on his lawn. He was told to help himself, and Cooper opened each jar and took a pinch of seeds. He got wheat, oats, corn, barley, rye, flax, buckwheat, sorghum, broom-corn, tobacco, turnips, beets, onions, parsnips, and every seed that was ever grown. On the way home he got a few prunes and peeled the rubber off the outside and saved the pits, and he picked up a few beans and peas, cucumbers and pumpkin seeds, and arrived home with a two-quart tomato can filled with a conglomeration of seeds, well shook up, which would do the business for that lawn, he thought. Happily for Cooper, his wife was out calling when he arrived, and he got a spade and rake and planted his seeds, and when his wife came home she noticed that the garden spot had been tampered with, and asked about it, when Cooper said he had sown a fine article of Kentucky blue grass on the lawn, and if everybody would let it alone they would have a grass carpet that would please the eye. Mrs. C. was delighted, and Cooper, who is a bad man, winked at his Irish water spaniel, who had been watching his proceedings, as much as to say, "We will have a picnic here one of these days." Well, Cooper has gone about his business as though he had not played a mean trick on a trusting wife, and she watched the little bed of "blue grass" with much enthusiasm. It has been a backward spring, but it will be plenty early enough for Cooper. Already a few beans have come up, which have caused the good lady to wonder at the peculiar appearance of blue grass on its first appearance, while Cooper has tried to play innocent. The other day an unmistakable cabbage plant showed its head at the surface of the ground, and it has caused some remark, though Cooper has convinced his wife that the cabbage plant is the result of the soil breeding back about eight years, when a German family lived in the house. Early in the present week quite a growth of wheat started up, and it is easy, up to this time, to convince the good lady that the wheat is blue grass, though the oats and barley and rye which have appeared have caused her to wonder at the ways of Providence. The appearance of a dozen spears of broom corn on Tuesday gave Mrs. C. much anxiety, and she telephoned to Cooper to know what to make of it, but he said he presumed the dog had carried a brush broom out in the yard and buried it, and it had sprouted. Wednesday there was a fair sprinkling of sorghum plants on the surface, and an unmistakable pumpkin vine, while several beets were coming through, and the wife spoke to Cooper about it, and asked him if he was sure he sowed blue grass. Cooper has feelings as well as anybody, and though a mild man, he felt hurt, and told his wife that when he planted the seeds, his responsibility ceased. He could not cause any particular thing to grow. If nature knew what a family wanted better than the family did, and got on a tear and grew pumpkins and tomatoes in a blue grass pasture, a wife should not blame the husband who sowed blue grass. By his fine conversational powers Mr. Cooper has thus far succeeded in warding of the blame which will certainly attach to him when his duplicity is known. Thus far he has succeeded in sawing it off onto Providence, but he is already talking of going away for his health. Some morning, when he goes out to the blue grass lawn, and sees that all the seeds which he surreptitiously planted under the disguise of blue grass have got up far enough to jostle each other, and present a variegated appearance sufficient to attract the attention of the deceived lady who only wanted a lawn and not a market garden, then Cooper will go away, and endeavor to negotiate a peace by diplomacy. He may have thought it would be a good joke, but no lady likes to have her feelings hurt that way. It is alleged that Cooper is going to try and lay the blame on Mr. Heafford, who gave him the seeds, but that will not work, as that gentleman would never trifle with the feelings of anybody. Cooper has got to stand it, and he might better confess, before the corn is waving and it is time to pole the beans and hill the potatoes, and pick buckwheat cakes.—Peck's Sun.

IN A SLEEPING CAR.

"Where do I camp?" he inquired, and was shown the lower berth next to me. "That's my pigeon-hole, is it? All right, old son, just watch my motion while I file myself away."

At this juncture he was desired to turn over his revolver to the porter, which he declined to do in a very spirited manner.

"'Old Dad' (his revolver) and me always sleep together, and we don't want no divorce," he explained.

The conductor remonstrated, but was advised not to try to "braid this mule's tail."

"This here's a sleepin' car, ain't it?" he at length inquired.

"Yes."

"Well, why don't you let people sleep then, when they've paid and gone into your game? If you're aiming to keep people awake and want company, just dance into the next car; there's lots of folks there don't want to sleep, nohow, and they'll be glad to see you."

The conductor withdrew, and my friend pulled off his boots and stretched himself, with many comments in an undertone on the poverty of the surroundings.

In about ten minutes this erratic person had his head out in the aisle.

"Say, you boy!" to the porter.

"Well, sah."

"Come a runnin'."

The porter drew near and was handed a pillow about as big as a pincushion.

"Take that goosehair thing away," commanded the cowboy.

"Don't you want a pillow, sah?" asked the porter.

"That ain't no pillow, and I don't want it nohow; I'm afraid it'll get in my ear."

After this, silence, and for a short time I slept. I roused up, however, at an exclamation on the part of my neighbor.

"Hold on there, my son, just drap them boots."

"Drap 'em."

They dropped.

"Just gwine to pull them spurs, I reckon. Now, don't monkey around my vamp, taking things no more. If you want anything, speak for it. If you can't speak make signs, and if you can't make signs shake a bush. You h'ar me?"

"Yes, sah."

After this, silence. The wheels and rails again sang together, and the car again kept approving time, and presently I slept without interruption.—Rocky Mountain News.

WOMEN'S HEALTH.

Out-Door Life and Activities Important Factors In Its Conservation.

The redemption of women's health, I am more and more convinced, depends on their taking to outdoor life and activities. Reading high class memoirs which are in every one's hands nowadays, of the Carlyles, the Sterlings and F. D. Maurice, one is disgusted to hear the continual story of weak health, and women who, brought face to face with the realities of life, immediately droop, languish and are a long time dying. If they have a house to keep and a share of the actual work, like Mrs. Carlyle, at Craigenputtock and Chelsea, they sicken mysteriously, and their life is a time of wrestling with household affairs, alternating with refuge on the sofa, or months in the doctor's hands, in that wretched, unimprovable state which just fled the sigh of a much tired husband who "wished his wife would get better, or something!" Have I not, through the ignorance of our day and generation, wasted life enough in attacks of the familiar household demon, nervous prostration, which only vanishes on turning the patient out of doors. Twice and again, friends [illegible]

—According to eminent medical authority, there is no good substitute for a diet of milk and eggs in typhus and typhoid fevers. Many lives are lost, he thinks, by starvation, owing to an over-estimate of the nutritive value of beef tea and meat juices.—N. Y. Examiner.

—The Corn Miller calls attention to the fact that where two varieties of corn—dent and flint—were grown on the same farm, care was taken at husking to determine the relative proportion of corn when in the ear and when shelled. The result showed that the dent variety gave eighty bushels of shelled corn per acre, and the flint sixty bushels, but when they were dried and weighed for market, it was found that the yield of flint exceeded that of dent.

—For the ingredients of a boiled dressing for salad, take the beaten yolks of three eggs, one teaspoonful mustard, two teaspoonfuls salt, one quarter of a teaspoonful of cayenne pepper, two tablespoonfuls sugar, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter or oil, one cup cream or milk, one-half cup of hot vinegar and the whites of three eggs beaten stiff. Cook until it thickens like soft custard. Stir well. This is excellent for lettuce, celery, asparagus and string beans.—Philadelphia Press.

—The anxiety of some farmers to get their cattle to grass early is strongly condemned by the National Live-Stock Journal. The little green food thus obtained, it says, does not help much in feeding them, but it gives them a distaste for dry fodder, and thus unfavorably affects their appetite for the food that must support them. Cattle should be kept upon winter food until grass has grown sufficiently to afford a good bite, and then they should not be left upon the grass more than an hour or two at a time for a few days.

—Toothpicks should never be kept upon a table where meals are served. There should be a convenient place near at hand where one can be conveniently taken in passing out of the room after meals. They should be used as quietly and privately as possible, and when used religiously thrown away. Good shaping of the human face divine, good manners, good taste and good health forbid the touching, tasting or handling of toothpicks as an article of diet, or as a sweet morsel of wood pulp to roll over or under the tongue.—Exchange.

—Since the cultivation of the Jerusalem artichoke by farmers for the use of their stock is becoming quite common, it may be of interest to know that the vegetable may be prepared for the table. Peel the artichokes and cut them into little dice; put them into a stewpan with a piece of butter, some salt, and a little parsley. Let them steam about a quarter of an hour; then dredge them with flour, add sufficient soup, boil up and serve with sippets of toast. Or boil the artichokes in salted water, drain and mash them. Add them to a soup in which very little pieces of meat are floating. Or boil and mash them; add them to a clear white soup and thicken with a tablespoonful of flour stirred into a cup of cream or good milk.—Detroit Post.

OUR FORESTS.

The Fate of the Woodlands Which Once Covered the Greater Part of the Continent.

The spruce is a hardworking, honest tree. It may not possess the grandeur of the pine nor the soaring crown of the hemlock; but a gum will outchew enonchune, and is deservedly popular in Boston, female colleges, and other select localities. The spruce is meeting, last of all, the doom of his evergreen fellows. In Maine and New Hampshire and in the Canadian provinces the ax of the logger is eating its way steadily and without mercy into the heart of the spruce country, and [illegible] will the place thereof know it no more. Thus went the pine, though when the latter reigned the spruce grew on unharmed, for loggers deemed it an ignoble tree, good enough to raise chewing gum, but unworthy of further usage. So they went for the pine alone, and hewed it down, as if the world stood watching until each lake and stream grew weary with the burden of murdered trees. If waters can be sad, I know no reason why the eastern lakes and rivers might not be mournful as well as was that old Greek fountain which sprang from a woman's tears, who mourned her children slain. For the pine trees and the waters were akin and loving. When the rain descended or the snows of winter melted, the trees gathered in the surplusage so that the stream flowed evenly to the sea, and when drought came the full lakes gave of their abundance to the sunshine's call and thus returned it to the thirsty trees. Now all are gone. The brooks of rounded rocks and the lakes but shallow basins. When floods of spring and autumn come to hand there is naught to stay them. They work destruction for a passing hour; then the streams dry up and the lakes become shallow basins again, so full of sandbars that even the catfish get aground and the contiguous factories buy steam engines or move away.

What became of the pine? The answer is readily given. It was shipped off to the West Indies, most of it, and came back as molasses, the greater part of which was brewed into New England rum, a horrible compound, and this the thrifty natives drank up. Such was the passing of the pine tree.

The hemlock, too, has gone its way. It was literally skinned out of existence. Men wanted its hide to use in tanning leather, and did not rest until it left them for ever. Hemlock timber was [illegible]

The Apaches are committing fearful atrocities in New Mexico and the southwest, carrying terror throughout the whole region. There are some serious faults in the management of these Indians, due, probably, to the weakness or inefficiency of the agents and officers of the government in that quarter. The Indians will leave their reservations and murder and rob to their hearts' content, and when hard pressed by the tardy troops, will break up into knots of two to six, steal through the mountains back to their proper limits, and in a short time be drawing rations of the government under treaty. The moment a single redskin is off the reservation the whole tribe should be outlawed, and thus every individual of them made a hostage for the good behavior of the rest.

"The President," said a Michigander recently, "evidently does not care much about securing harmony in his party in Michigan at least. It may be the popular thing just at present to snub the politicians, but they are essential to the success of a party, and Mr. Cleveland will find that out should he be renominated in 1888. The worst feature of the President's course to my mind is that while we may be able to prevent Cleveland's renomination we cannot remove the discouraging effect of his administration upon the working Democrats of the country."

The fight of Ireland for home rule is making good progress. Patience, persistence and the preservation of law and order on the part of the Nationalists are alone required to insure ultimate success. With the enlarged representation which they will acquire at the general elections under the Franchise act, and under the wise and moderate leadership of Parnell, they will be enabled to command terms from either party or from both parties in the new Parliament.

The bill increasing the salaries of supreme Judges to $5,000 passed the senate on Thursday of last week.

A Remarkable Escape.

Mrs. Mary A. Dailey, of Tunkhannock, Pa., was afflicted for six years with Asthma and Bronchitis, during which time the best physicians could give no relief. Her life was despaired of, until in last October she procured a Bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery, when immediate relief was felt, and by continuing its use for a short time she was completely cured, gaining in flesh 50 lbs in a few months. Free Trial Bottles of this certain cure of all Throat and Lung Diseases at Weed's Drug Store. Large Bottles $1.

It Will Cure You!

GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS are the great blood purifier, liver and kidney remedy and life-giving principle, a perfect renovator and invigorator of the system, carrying away all poisonous matter and restoring the blood to a healthy condition, enriching it, refreshing and invigorating both mind and body. They are easy of administration, prompt in their action, certain in their results, safe and reliable in all forms of disease. Every moment of our lives, every part of our bodies, is wearing out and is being built up anew. This work is accomplished by the blood. The blood, if pure, makes the entire circuit of the body every seven minutes. But if it becomes weak or vitiated and does not perform its work properly the system is actually poisoned by the worn-out matter clogging the vital organs instead of leaving the body. Cleanse the blood whenever you find its impurities bursting through the skin in pimples, eruptions, sores, etc. Keep the liver in order, the blood pure, health of the system will follow. Take GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS and no other. Sold by

The Banana.

By descent the banana is a developed tropical lily, not at all remotely allied to the common iris, only that its flowers and fruit are clustered together on a hanging spike instead of growing solitary and separate as in the true irises. The blossoms which, though pretty, are comparatively inconspicuous for the size of the plant, bow the extraordinary persistence of the lily type; for almost all the vast number of species more or less directly descended from the primitive lily continue to the very end of the chapter to have six petals, six stamens and three rows of seeds in their fruits or capsules. But practical man, with his eye always steadily fixed on the one important quality of edibility—the sum and substance to most people of all botanical research—has confined his attention almost entirely to the fruit of the banana. In all essentials (other than the systematically unimportant one just alluded to) the banana fruit in its original state exactly resembles the capsule of the iris—that pretty pod that divides in three when ripe, and shows the delicate orange-coated seed lying in triple rows within; only, in the banana, the fruit does not open; in the sweet language of technical botany, it is an indehiscent capsule, and the seeds, instead of standing separate and distinct, as in the iris, are imbedded in a soft and pulpy substance which forms the edible and practical part of the entire arrangement.

This is the proper appearance of the original and natural banana, before it has been taken in hand and cultivated by tropical man. When cut across the middle, it ought to show three rows of seeds, interspersed with pulp, and faintly preserving some dim memory of the dividing wall which once separated them. In practice, however, the banana differs widely from this theoretical ideal, as practice often will differ from theory; for it has been so long cultivated and selected by man—being probably one of the very oldest, if not actually quite the oldest, of domesticated plants—that it has all but lost the original habit of producing seeds. This is a common effect of cultivation on fruits, and it is of course deliberately aimed at by horticulturists, as the seeds are generally a nuisance, regarded from the point of view of the eater, and their absence improves the fruit, as long as one can manage to get along somehow without them. In the pretty little Tangerine oranges (so ingeniously corrupted by fruiters into mandarins), the seeds have almost been cultivated out; in the best pineapples, and in the small grapes known in the dried state as currants, they have quite disappeared, while in some varieties of pears they survive only in the form of shriveled, barren and useless pippins. But the banana, more than any other plant we know of, has managed for many centuries to do without seeds altogether. The cultivated sort, especially in America, is quite seedless, and the plants are propagated entirely by suckers.

How Girls Should Be Trained.

Three score of gentlemen, comprising members of the Twilight club and their guests, dined in D'Orville's restaurant on the top floor of the Mills building last night. With their coffee and their cigars they discussed, somewhat informally, the topic "How Should Girls Be Trained?" Secretary Charles Wingate said the parents ought to be more companionable with their children than they generally were. There should be no restraints, based on false dignity or false modesty, between parents and their children. Most mothers were too timid about telling their daughters things which all growing girls ought to know.

Dr. Jerome Walker said that in the training of girls their physical as well as their moral and mental development must be considered. The use of corsets should be discouraged by parents. There was no reason why girls should not pursue practically the same athletic games that boys do. He thought that the girls at Vassar might just as well play foot-ball as the boys at Princeton. There was no game that gave the muscles of the body such perfect and healthful play as foot-ball. Girls could be provided with suitable gymnastic suits and permitted to kick the ball about under the eye of a matron.

"Would you have Chicago girls play foot-ball?" asked somebody in a serious tone.

"Certainly, all girls," was the reply.

"But would not the Chicago girls have an undue advantage?"

Dr. Walker paid no further attention to the interruption, but remarked that girls should be taught to run and to cook. The responsibility for their training rested equally upon the father and the mother.

Gen. Stewart L. Woodford said that a girl was a human being, and whatever a human being was entitled to in the way of an education, either physical, moral or mental, a girl was entitled to. She was certainly entitled to a physical education that would thoroughly and properly develop her. Gen. Woodford said: "The garment that would bind or fetter a boy's body no mother would put upon him. The garment that would bind or fetter a girl's body no father should allow to be put upon her, supposing the mother, through ignorance or false pride, should countenance such a thing. As a rule, the mother's true womanly instinct can be trusted to give her daughter wholesome counsel." Husbands, the speaker said, had an equal responsibility with the wives in the training of their children. There was a personal and individual responsibility that neither husband nor wife should shirk.

Col. George Wingate was of the opinion that the father could do but little toward training a girl. The mother's influence was naturally greater. He believed that girls should be taught by their mothers all that was necessary to prepare them to assume the duties and responsibilities of wives and mothers. Girls should be taught that personal familiarity on the part of young men was at no time proper and should be discouraged. Col. Wingate said that he had in mind particularly the "promiscuous hugging and kissing" that sometimes prevailed in country places.

Ex-Judge W. H. Arnoux had never been able to find a man who could truthfully say that he had been able to train up his girls. As a rule it was the girls who trained the fathers. Algernon S. Higgins was inclined to the notion that girls most always trained themselves. Girls were pretty sure to take their cue from their mothers, and when they arrived at a marriageable age they would each take a young man and proceed to train him. Mr. McAdam, Mr. Crawford, and others spoke. S. S. Packard presided, and after each speech he would remark encouragingly, "Still we have not learned anything."—New York Times.

Faces that Seemed to Change.

"H. E.," a Newark lady, writes to the New York Sun as follows:

"Many people are deceived by optical illusions. On a recent morning I looked into my brother's room, and saw him standing at his dressing case. Then I remembered that I had heard him go down stairs, and I said to myself, 'this is an optical illusion.' Knowing that it was such, I looked at the figure until it slowly faded away. Let me add that I am in good bodily health, cheerful, and, I believe, sound in mind. A friend, who died lately, said in her last hours, when apparently she was rational, that she saw her dead parents and brother in her room. She exclaimed, addressing the friends who stood at her bedside: 'There they are, right there. Can't you see them?' I repeat that, as far as anyone could judge, she was thoroughly conscious. But we will pass over her case, for it is not exceptional, and while we can not say she was delirious, neither can we affirm positively that she had her senses.

"But here, I think, is an unusual form of optical illusion, if it was an illusion at all. A few days ago a well-known business man of New York passed away. His widow is a clear-minded and educated lady, without any morbid or superstitious taint in her nature, or any belief in Spiritualism. While bending over her husband shortly before his death she observed that the expression of his face was changing, and the next moment she saw there, instead, the face of her dead brother. The two men were entirely unlike in appearance, one being light and having a blonde beard, and the other very dark. Shortly afterward the lady saw on her husband's face the expression of another deceased friend, and a little later that of a third. Her morbid and overwrought fancy deceived her, someone says. Could two persons be deceived at the same time and in the same way? I ask this because three years ago this lady and her sister watched beside the dying child of the latter. The little girl's face suddenly changed. One of the ladies saw that the other observed this, and said:

"'Emily, who was it?'

"'Adelaide,' was the answer.

"'Yes, Adelaide.'

"The two ladies have told me that they saw unmistakably the face of their dead cousin, a woman, shining out through the face of this dying child. I offer no explanation of these phenomena, and present them only because to me they seem very interesting."

Theodora.

Theodora was the daughter of a bear-keeper attached to the hippodrome at Constantinople, and was one of three sisters whom their mother sent on the stage when they were still children 7 or 8 years old. With no talent either for music or dancing, her fortune was in her face and her tongue. Her pretty features, her nimble movements, her audacious smartness in repartee, made her the most popular and notorious in the pantomimes (to use the nearest modern equivalent) which delighted a people whose taste had fallen below the regular drama. Needless to say what was the morality of the Byzantine stage, or what the life which the young actress led. Her enemies of later years declared it to have been more than usually shameless and disgusting, but the question, if delicately balanced less or more, besides being now insoluble, need make little difference to our view of her character.

After some years she accompanied a wealthy Tyrian as his mistress, to the governorship of Tripoli; quarreled with him, left him, and after being reduced to sad straits in Egypt, found her way back to Constantinople, where, according to a story current long afterward in the city, she sought to support herself by spinning wool in a house near the edge of the Golden Horn. This looks like trying to turn over a new leaf. However, she did not conceal her charms. Encouraged by the words of an Oriental fortune-teller, who had promised her wealth and power, she threw herself in the way of Justinian, who yielded at once to her fascinations. He was then about 40 years of age—probably some 20 years her senior—nephew of the reigning emperor, and gathering into his hands the reins of government which were beginning to slip from the grasp of his aged and ignorant uncle.

He was an able, and well-educated man, already remarkable for his fondness of theology and his assiduous attention to public business. His passion led him to promise to marry the whilom actress, but a law dating (in substance) from the time of Augustus, and [illegible] enacted by later emperors, forbade the union of senators and other persons of exalted rank to women who had been on the stage. Nothing was left but to repeal the law, which the emperor was compelled by the urgency of his nephew to do, and the statute may still be read in that corpus juris which so long held sway over the continental Europe, a monument of Theodora's arts and Justinian's susceptibility. There had been, however, a more serious obstacle to the nuptials of the eager pair. The Empress Euphemia was an ignorant and rustic person, who had risen in life too late to acquire the polish of the capital. But she was pious, and she was respectable to the backbone. She had probably heard of Theodora's earlier fame, for the court was like most courts; anyhow she knew what Theodora had been, and the idea of her nephew marrying such a person was too shocking to be considered.

While she lived she held out and kept her husband to his resistance; but when she died he gave way, the law was repealed, and the marriage was solemnized, and when in a few years the old emperor died Theodora was crowned along with her husband, and received the homage of the senate, the priesthood, and the people. A rise like this had never been seen before, not even in Constantinople, and was never seen again. That such a person should have married an emperor was wonderful enough. But that of all emperors she should have married Justinian, the studious and pious Justinian, the industrious and abstemious Justinian—here was indeed matter for a hymn to Aphrodite, had there been a poet to sing it. The Contemporary Review.

ATWOOD,

I think I am justified in asking a continuance of the liberal patronage with which I have been favored. I am located in the most favorable spot in this vicinity, and as far as anyone can do it I can supply the wants of my Old Customers, and many more new ones. I buy as cheaply as any dealers in this region, and my freights are as low, while my expenses are much less. As a consequence I can sell at least as CHEAP as any dealers in this region. I solicit the Trade of the Farmers of this vicinity, and am satisfied that I can give satisfaction to all in Goods and Prices.

Very truly yours,

FIST VERSUS BRAIN.

The Great Contest Between Labor and Capital.

Dr. Talmage on the Only Cure for the Evil—"Whatsoever Ye Would That Men Should Do to You, Do Ye Even so to Them."

Dr Talmage preached on Sunday in the Brooklyn Tabernacle on the subject, "Fist Versus Brain." The text was from Matthew vii, 12: "Whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them." Dr. Talmage said:

LABOR VS. CAPITAL.

The greatest war the world has ever seen is that going on between labor and capital. Not a strife like the thirty years' war of which history tells us, for this is a war of centuries. It is a war of five continents, a war hemispheric. In this country the middle classes, who have held the balance of power and upon whom the Nation has depended as mediators between the two extremes, are diminishing, and at the same ratio we will soon have no middle class, for all the people will be very rich or very poor, and the country be divided between Princes and paupers, between palaces and hovels. The two great antagonistic forces are closing in upon each other. "Telegraph operators' strikes," "railroad employes' strikes," "Pennsylvania miners' strikes," the movements on the part of boycotters and dynamiters, are only skirmishes before the general engagement, or, if you prefer, they are escapes through the safety valve of an imprisoned force that promises the explosion of society.

You may pooh-pooh it, and prophesy that this trouble, like an angry child, will cry itself to sleep, and think you have belittled it into insignificance by calling it Socialism, Fourierism, St. Simonism, Nihilism or Communism, but that can not hinder the fact that it is the mightiest, darkest, most terrible threat of this century. Moreover...

...the printing-office the hour the paper was to go to press, or the coal-mines the day the coal was to be delivered, or the house-scaffolding the day when their absence would make the builder fail in his contract—all these things have given American labor a heavy blow on the head, and crippled its arms and lamed its feet, and pierced it through the heart. Take the last great strike in America—the telegraph operators' strike—and the loss to the operators was $[illegible], and poorer wages ever since. Neither sudden trap sprung by employers nor violence ever untied the knots from the knuckles of toil or put more money into the callous palm. Barbarism will never cure the wrongs of civilization. Frederick the Great wanted the property of a miller adjoining the grounds near Potsdam. The King offered the miller three times the value of the property. The miller would not sell, because it was the old homestead, and he felt about it as Naboth did about his vineyard when Ahab wanted it. Frederick the Great was a rough and terrible man, and he ordered the miller into his presence. The King, flourishing a stick with which he was sometimes accustomed to strike the officers of State, said to the miller: "I have offered you three times the value of your property, and if you will not sell it I will take it anyhow." The miller replied, calmly: "Your Majesty will not take it." "Yes, I will," yelled the King. "Then," replied the miller, "I will sue you before the Chancery Court." Then the King relinquished his demand. So the most imperious of outrages against the poor and the hard-working shall cower before the law. Wrongs will be righted, not by violence and against the law, but according to law.

WHERE TO LOOK FOR RELIEF.

Yet all attempts at reconciliation between labor and capital so far having failed, and the two standing with their thumbs on each other's throat ready for strangulation, it behooves us to look elsewhere for relief. And from my text it bounds out, roseate and jubilant, and putting one hand on the broadcloth shoulder of Capital, puts the other hand on the...

OUR NATIONAL GAME.

Base Ball Tournament at Charlevoix, the Fourth.

The committee on the Fourth of July celebration have very sensibly discarded, for this year at least, the greased pole, jumping, chasing the pig, throwing the hammer and kindred sports, so called, and present something better for excursionists and townspeople, in the shape of a grand Base Ball Tournament.

We can see no good reason why our allegiance to the American Eagle cannot be as well maintained by witnessing our national game as by the stale sports so common to the day.

Come and see us and Charlevoix will make you feel at home.

Proceedings of the M. E. Ministerial Association.

The first semi annual meeting of the ministerial association of the Grand Traverse District, convened at the M. E. church Charlevoix, Tuesday June 9, 1885, at 2:30 o'clock. An interesting sermon was delivered by A. L. Thurston, on Missionary work. Essays of excellent merit were read by Brothers J. M. Smith [illegible]

IN MEMORIAM!

The Edict Goes Forth and the County Seat is Located at East Jordan.

The Board of Supervisors met pursuant to adjournment on the 11th, and, after hearing the report of the East Jordan investigating committee, and considerable skirmishing and log rolling voted to remove the seat of Justice to East Jordan, in accordance with the will of the people as expressed at the last election. The vote stood 13 to 15—Hayes and Norwood dissenting.

A resolution was then submitted to remove the county seat from East Jordan to Boyne City, which was carried by the following vote:

Nays—Upright, Burgess, Ward, Harris, Kent—5.

Thus the issue is squarely before the people again and will be a source of intrigue, and banter and falsification, and conniving, and all manner of unpleasantness, until the first Monday of April, 1886. [illegible]

[illegible]

. . . the valuation of the county, in the absence of precise information, was raised from $100,000 to $250,000. The taxation was, of course, increased in the same ratio, and the inhabitants have been paying it, until they bestirred themselves and showed figures of values. The result was a bill refunding $631.88, which passed the senate a few days ago, and also the house.—News.

The bell was placed in its former position in the lobby of the hall.

THE RATE PROBLEM.

Proceedings Before the United States Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce.

Chicago, June 16.—Mr. E. J. Martin, who attends to the transportation business of P. D. Armour & Co., packers, was before the Senate Committee on Inter-State Commerce yesterday morning. He said that arbitration invariably went against the shipper. Live hogs were carried to the seaboard at the same tariff rate as provisions. The shippers claimed that this should not be, as they had to pay freight on packages and salt amounting to twenty-five per cent. This placed the Chicago packers at a disadvantage as compared with Boston and Southern packers. He presented a petition to the pool, setting forth these wrongs, but it was shelved. The charges on live hogs were too low. He did not see how the companies made any money at the stock yards along the routes. When the hand of the pool was off, as it was to-day, the matter remedied itself and rates reverted back to a sound basis. The dressed sheep rate was ninety-five cents against fifty cents for live sheep. The roads do this because they will get the business anyway. Meats shipped in refrigerator cars were confined to particular roads, because they had to have ice stations for refilling the cars at different stages along the roads. The roads claimed that the excessive weight of the refrigerator cars made it necessary for them to make extra charges. The companies were perfectly free to use refrigerator cars for return freight. He thought there should be some supervision of the law of Inter-State commerce and some appeal outside of railroad men. If the railroads pay a shipper the amount his business was worth to them over another man's business in the way of rebates it would do no harm, but a system of rebates that would build up one man's business at the expense of another's would eventually work general havoc.

Mr. H. R. Hobart, editor of the Railway Age, said that there were 125,500 miles of railways in the country, the capital stock outstanding of which was $3,856,000,000, and the bonded debt $3,939,000,000, making a total investment of $7,895,000,000. These roads employed 725,000 persons, giving support to 3,000,000. The roads were in a very precarious condition. About 10 per cent. of them had been sold under foreclosure, the result of which was to wipe out the capital and bonded indebtedness of these roads. It was the railroads and not the public that now required protection.

At this point in the proceedings a deputation of the Milwaukee Chamber of Commerce, headed by Mr. Charles A. Chapin, acting President, and consisting of Robert Eliot, Edward Sanderson, Charles Ray, I. H. Lowry, E. P. Bacon and J. B. Merill, were introduced.

Mr. Chapin said that his experience was that many railroads made a practice of giving "rebate rates" rather than straight "flat rates" for the simple purpose of getting into their hands funds of shippers which they might retain for a while, which was really floating indebtedness, but which never showed up in the railroad statements, as each road had thousands and some of them tens of thousands of shippers. If rebates even to small amounts were retained by the roads unjustly the aggregate would amount to millions. The witness declared that in two shipments he had tied up $1,100. The shipments had been made over a year ago, and the result had been that these two corporations had really made forced loans aggregating $1,100 from the witness, and he did not know yet when he would get his money.

E. P. Bacon, of Milwaukee, thought water-routes should be fostered by the Government, as they reduced rates and thereby proved a benefit to the community. Charles Ray, John B. Merrill and I. H. Lowry, of Milwaukee, also favored the commission with their views. After listening to the opinions of Mr. W. J. Pope, member of a prominent commission firm, the committee adjourned.

MORE DESTRUCTIVE STORMS.

Property Destroyed and Lives Lost by Another Tornado in Iowa, Dakota and Nebraska.

Sioux City, Ia., June 16.—A tornado swept over this section of country Sunday night, causing great damage to all the towns within a radius of twenty-five miles, and demolishing farm improvements in all directions. The post-office here was unroofed and damaged to the extent of $1,500. The other losses are: Trotle, Livingstone & Co., dry goods, $4,500; C. Shenkberg, wholesale grocer, $5,100; J. McDavis, barn and residence, $5,000; J. D. Fair & Co., warehouse, $1,000; Standard oil warehouse, $400; St. Paul & Omaha Railroad barge wrecked, $1,500; the ferryboat Bennett, $5,000. The Methodist and Baptist churches are razed, as are several dwellings. J. H. Rivers was caught in the wreck of his house and had three ribs broken. It is impossible at this hour to fully summarize the disasters. Only one telegraph wire is working.

Reports from the adjacent towns are coming in but slowly. At Jackson, Neb., Dewey & Barrey's store is blown down. At Elk Point, D. T., the railroad coal station and wind-mill are demolished. At Coleridge, Neb., sixteen buildings are destroyed. A. Hudson's merchandise store was blown away in fragments. Two children were killed and three grown persons seriously injured.

Dubuque, Ia., June 16.—Specials received here give the following particulars of the storm in Northern and Northwestern Iowa. Much damage was done at Cherokee, Munson and Storm Lake. At Aurelia fences and buildings were leveled in all directions, and several persons were killed. Marcus appears to have suffered the most. The west end of the station house is gone. The freight house was entirely destroyed, the freight blown to atoms and can not be found. Nearly every building in the town is damaged. The M. E. Church was completely ruined, and Jackson's lumber-yard is scattered in every direction. M. Y. Ames' house is gone and two of the occupants have been found dead. The reports indicate great damage of life and property.

Lemars, Ia., June 16.—The rain fell in torrents here Sunday night, accompanied by a fierce electric storm. The gas-house was completely demolished. The spire of St. Joseph's Catholic Church, 165 feet high, was blown down and the building damaged about $10,000. St. James Catholic Church was totally destroyed, at a loss of over $4,000. The Plymouth roller mills and elevator were unroofed, the smoke-stack demolished, the cribs blown down, the total damage being about $10,000. The loss in the city is estimated at $100,000, with an equal amount in the country. No lives were lost in town, but two men and two children were killed in the country. Of the six or eight wounded several are not expected to live.

Details of Maxwell's Arrest.

San Francisco, Cal., June 16.—The steamer City of Sydney, from Australia, arrived yesterday morning. She brings Auckland (New Zealand) papers containing an account of the arrest, on May 5, of Walter H. Lennox Maxwell, charged with having murdered C. A. Preller at St. Louis April 5. When United States Consul Gamble arrested Maxwell the accused seemed surprised, but took the matter coolly and remarked that the whole affair was a mistake which could easily be explained. When asked if he was a physician he replied in the negative, saying he was a French army officer.

GENERAL GRANT.

The Journey of Himself and Family to Mount MacGregor—The Illustrious Patient Greatly Fatigued by the Trip—Dr. Douglas Hopes the Change Will Prove Temporarily Beneficial to the Patient.

New York, June 17.—There was a subdued manner and an appearance of sadness manifested by all the members of the family and household Monday as the arrangements for the departure were proceeded with. The thought of the probability that the General might not return alive to his old home, though it found no expression on the part of any one, was evidently present in the minds of all, and when evening came and cheery conversation was indulged in, Gen. Grant was no longer heard, and his expressive countenance showed how keenly he felt the loss of his power to articulate. It was with difficulty that sufficient self-command could be obtained to suppress a flow of tears.

William H. Vanderbilt's private car was the last of three which made up the special train which was to convey General Grant to Mount MacGregor. General Grant arrived at the depot about nine o'clock, and at once entered the Vanderbilt car and took his seat on a sofa. With his own hands he adjusted his woolen skull cap, and drew closer the neck scarf, so as to conceal the ugly swelling that filled out the right side of his neck even with his ear. The heavy drapery was so arranged so as to prevent any draughts from reaching the sick man. Mrs. Grant sat at the General's right hand and he was ever under her watchful eyes. The ride through the tunnel in the city was the worst that was to be expected during the entire trip. The sharp curves shook the car a little, but the care of the engineer prevented any shaking that could disturb the General. Mrs. Fred Grant, Mrs. Ulysses Grant and Mrs. Sartoris were also in the car, while the children of the household were under the care of Colonel Fred Grant, in a forward car.

About 10 o'clock General Grant turned a little in his chair, in order that he might command a better view of the west bank of the river. He wanted to gain a glimpse of West Point as the train hurried on. The scenery was growing very familiar to the sick man. Scenes of his cadetship were coming to view, and at length at 10:15 when the quarters at West Point came into view, the General nodded across the river, and again faintly smiled as Mrs. Grant glanced across at him to see if he was noting the point they were passing. She smiled as he nodded. The ladies hurried to the river side of the car to watch, and Colonel Fred Grant pointed out a pile of rocks which he had heard his father mention in telling his swimming adventures of his West Point days. The General spoke no word, but followed the scene with his eyes, looking rearward until West Point was shut out from view by a curve in the road.

Once the General pointed to a residence on the west bank of the river, and, leaning toward Colonel Fred Grant, he attempted to speak and tell him it was the house of a friend, at which in particular he had been entertained, but so weak was his voice that the General could not make himself heard. Dr. Douglas requested him not to make any effort to speak, and bade him write what he had to say, which the General did. At twelve o'clock Dr. Douglas said: "I have made no effort to feel his pulse. I could not do so while the train is in motion. He is showing less fatigue than might have been expected. I am anxious to reach the mountain, so that I can clear his throat of this dust, which is trying to him. He is feeling the heat, but his strength is holding out remarkably well."

Albany was passed at 12:20, when the General was given his liquid food. At 1:52 o'clock the train dashed into Saratoga, where a great crowd was in waiting. Post Wheeler, G. A. R., in full uniform, greeted its old commander, and stood guard while the transfer was being made. At this point the Mount McGregor Road runs parallel with the New York Central, so that the General simply stepped from the platform of one car to that of another, and in a few minutes the Mount McGregor special began puffing away up the long hill.

At several stations between Tarrytown and Saratoga great crowds of people greeted the General with cheers, to which he made acknowledgment by waving his hand and smiling.

The climb up the mountain side was made in three-quarters of an hour, and at 2:40 o'clock, after five hours and forty minutes journeying, General Grant arrived at the summit of Mount McGregor. The top of the car-steps was flush with the platform, and before any one knew of his intention, the General stepped off and started up the hill toward the Drexel cottage, four hundred yards away. A rustic wooden awning covered the plank walk, and at the end was a rudely-painted wood en sign bearing the legend: "Welcome to Our Hero—1865—1885." Borne along by his tremendous will-power, the General tottered for about one hundred feet up the steep path. Then he wavered a moment and stood still. Detective Fryer, of Saratoga, was close by with a rattan chair, and the General sank, or rather fell back into it. The effort to make the ascent had exhausted him. Constable Minnick and Mr. Fryer each took hold of a side of the chair and carried the invalid up to the house. The moment they sat down their burden the General sprang from his seat and walked unaided up the flight of ten steps, with the [illegible] assistance of his cane. He sat down gasping on the veranda, and after half an hour went inside, where he was placed in an easy chair. Dr. Douglas was anxious to examine and cleanse the General's throat. He found that considerable irritation had been caused by the black dust which had lodged during the journey, but said that the surface underneath, though inflamed, appeared better than he had expected. The swelling outside had steadily increased after passing Hudson, and during the last hour of the trip it rapidly filled forward on the neck and below the collar.

When the doctor had cleansed and treated his throat the General reappeared on the piazza, and was seated on a pillow-cushioned chair. Toward evening a brisk shower came up, but he braved it and staid out till the wood mosquitoes came, when he arose, and, with the assistance of his cane, slowly walked into the room and laid down. In faint whispers he let Dr. Douglas know that he was very weary and was glad the journey was ended. Then his pulse was eighty beats to the minute.

Last evening Dr. Douglas said: "I think that the General's sojourn here will be of temporary benefit to him, although a permanent improvement can not be hoped for."

Killed by His Step-Son.

Cairo, Ill., June 17.—William Caldwell, living nine miles south of Sikeston, Mo. (New Madrid County), was shot and instantly killed Sunday morning by a half witted step-son, nearly grown, whom he had chided for not performing certain duties satisfactorily, and whom he threatened with punishment if Monday's task was not better performed. The boy, brooding over the threat, arose early, and, procuring a shot-gun loaded with buckshot walked out into the back-yard where his father sat awaiting the call to breakfast. When about twenty yards distant he deliberately leveled the gun and fired, the heavy charge literally tearing the father to pieces. The boy fled.

The National Produce Association.

Chicago, June 17.—The Twelfth Annual Convention of the National Produce Association will be held in this city next November. The scope of this Convention will be much wider than of any hitherto held. Delegates will be in attendance from the principal commercial and agricultural organizations of America and Europe. Matters incidental to the recent great development of the produce business in this country will be fully discussed, as the proper handling and transportation of perishable produce, for example. The great question of how to feed the peoples of all nations cheaply to the consumer and profitably to the producer will, the Association believes, give scope for investigation and debate.

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

Senate—On the 9th the following bills were passed: Amending section [illegible] relative to county jails, providing for placing the statue of Lewis Cass in the gallery of illustrious Americans at Washington; regulating the holding of easements; providing for the sale of lands seized for delinquent taxes in and prior to 1882; revising laws for the incorporation of manufacturing companies. Bills for the organization of various militia companies were passed. In executive session various appointments by the Governor were approved. The Governor noted his approval of various bills recently passed by the Senate.

House—The bills for the organization of various militia companies were passed. The following bills were lost: Amending the act relative to the adulteration of milk; relative to counting votes at elections; relative to the appointment of Fish Wardens; providing for the disposal of State swamp lands remaining unsold after January 1, 1886. Among the bills passed were those providing for suits against foreign co-operative insurance companies; prohibiting the use of the words "warranty deed" in other than warranty deeds. The Senate bill reducing the kerosene oil test was laid on the table pending a third reading.

Senate—On the 10th the bill apportioning the Senatorial Districts agreed on by the Republicans caused great excitement. Twenty of the new districts are Republican and twelve Democratic. The Democratic members opposed the apportionment, but the bill was finally passed and sent to the House. The minority of the joint committee which investigated the charges against ex-Quartermaster-General Shakespeare submitted a report in which they claim that the charges made by the majority are entirely unsubstantiated. The Governor communicated his approval of various acts recently passed by this body.

House—The Governor noted his approval of divers acts passed by the House during the past few days, and the minority report of the joint committee appointed to investigate the Shakespeare charges was submitted.

Senate—On the 11th the Governor noted his approval of various acts passed by this body. In Committee of the Whole the Senate agreed to the Drainage bill. The bills amending the General Railroad laws and the Military laws were passed.

House—The Senatorial and Representative Apportionment bills came up and caused a bitter party fight. After much wrangling the previous question was ordered and the bill was passed by a strict party vote. The bill makes First, Second and Third districts out of Wayne County, and the other counties are as follows: Fourth, Washtenaw and Monroe; Fifth, Lenawee; Sixth, Jackson and Hillsdale; Seventh, Branch and Calhoun; Eighth, St. Joseph and Kalamazoo; Ninth, Berrien and Cass; Tenth, Van Buren and Allegan; Eleventh, Barry and Eaton; Twelfth, Shiawassee and Ingham; Thirteenth, Livingston and Genesee; Fourteenth, Oakland; Fifteenth, Macomb and St. Clair; Sixteenth, Sanilac and Lapeer; Seventeenth, Huron and Tuscola; Eighteenth, Saginaw; Nineteenth, Clinton and Ionia; Twentieth, Kent; Twenty-first, Muskegon and Ottawa; Twenty-second, Mason, Lake, Newaygo and Oceana; Twenty-third, Mecosta and Montcalm; Twenty-fourth, Gratiot, Midland, Gladwin, Clare and Isabella; Twenty-fifth, Arenac and Bay; Twenty-sixth, Oscoda, Ogemaw, Alpena, Alcona and Iosco; Twenty-seventh, Montmorency, Presque Isle, Roscommon, Missaukee, Kalkaska, Crawford, Otsego and Cheboygan; Twenty-eighth, Benzie, Manistee, Wexford and Osceola; Twenty-ninth, Manistee, Leelanaw, Charlevoix, Antrim and Grand Traverse; Thirtieth, Emmet, Mackinac, Chippewa, Alger, Schoolcraft and Delta; Thirty-first, Iron, Menominee and Marquette; Thirty-second, Keweenaw, Isle Royal, Ontonagon, Vireque and Houghton. This makes twenty Republican and twelve Democratic districts, figuring on last fall's vote. After the passage of this Senate bill an attempt was made to pass the House bill, but after consultation it was abandoned for the present. The bill was advanced to third reading, however. Bills were passed establishing liens for labor upon logs, lumber, etc., and relative to jurors in courts of record in Wayne County.

Senate—On the 12th an unsuccessful attempt was made to pass the Anti-Board Insurance bill. The Senate Apportionment bill was signed by the Governor. In the afternoon session the House Apportionment bill was passed.

House—The House Apportionment bill came up and was passed by a strict party vote after a little filibustering. Representatives are apportioned by the bill as follows: Ten to Wayne County, four each to Kent and Saginaw; three to Lenawee, two each to Allegan, Bay, Berrien, Calhoun, Eaton, Genesee, Hillsdale, Ingham, Ionia, Jackson, Kalamazoo, Lapeer, Macomb, Marquette, Monroe, Montcalm, Muskegon, Ottawa, Sanilac, St. Clair, Shiawassee, Tuscola, Van Buren and Washtenaw; one each to Branch, Barry, Cass, Clinton, Gratiot, Huron, Houghton, Isabella, Manistee, Mason, Mecosta, Menominee, Oceana and St. Joseph; one to the counties of Midland, Gladwin and Clare; one to Osceola and Missaukee; one to Leelanaw and Benzie; one to Ogemaw, Roscommon and Oscoda; one to Antrim, Iosco and Alcona; one to Alpena, Otsego and Montmorency; one to Cheboygan, Emmet and Presque Isle; one to Grand Traverse and Kalkaska; one to Charlevoix and Manistee; one to Chippewa, Alger, Mackinac and Schoolcraft; one to Delta and Iron; one to Ontonagon, Baraga, Keweenaw and Isle Royal. In joint convention the two houses received United States Senator Thomas W. Palmer, who made an address congratulating the Legislature on the work it had done.

Senate—On the 13th the following bills were passed: To enroll men who served in the First Regiment New York Artillery as Michigan volunteers; to regulate the transit of Texas cattle through the State; amending Howell relative to probate courts, authorizing transfers of transcripts of judgments from one Justice to another.

House—This body worked in Committee of the Whole, advancing a large number of bills to third reading.

The Millers' Association Crop Report.

Milwaukee, Wis., June 15.—The crop report of the Millers' National Association has been made public. The report was compiled from replies to 3,000 circular inquiries sent to the milling fraternity and others. The total crop in the spring and winter wheat States and Territories is estimated at 359,104,800 bushels, a decrease from last year of 173,399,100 bushels.

The crop of Wisconsin is estimated at 15,000,000, as against 20,083,000 in 1884; Minnesota, 38,861,000 compared to 41,507,000 in 1884; Dakota, 25,000,000 in 1885, 22,300,000 in 1884; Iowa, 27,725,000 in 1885, 31,270,000 in 1884; Nebraska, 16,200,000 in 1885, 18,487,407 in 1884; Illinois, 9,000,000 in 1885, 32,374,000 in 1884; Ohio, 19,975,000 in 1885, 41,186,000 in 1884.

Cutting Down Expenditures.

Washington, June 13.—The reductions in the pay-rolls of the Agricultural Department for the month of May were a little over $3,000, as compared with the previous monthly average. Additional reductions for June, amounting to about $500, have been made, and others are thought to be inevitable in order to prevent a deficiency. The working force of the Statistical Bureau has already been greatly reduced, but a close computation discloses the fact that the available funds on hand are insufficient to carry the work through the months upon the present scale, and it is apprehended that the discharge or suspension of nearly all the remaining force will take place at once.

—The coming waterproof will no longer be the disagreeable and ugly black India-rubber covering of the present time. It is of English manufacture and it is to be had in many shapes and colors. It resembles a beautiful silk traveling cloak, and sheds dust and rain alike. There is no suggestion about it of the plebeian waterproof paper used for protecting goods sent from a distance. This new garment is not a cheap article, but as it combines waterproof, duster and traveling cloak it is perhaps fully worth the price asked for it.—Harper's Bazar.

—The Blue Book of the United Kingdom shows a falling-off all around in the volume of maritime commerce last year as compared with 1883. It also shows a decline in the total number of vessels and of men employed. The total number of vessels built for British and Colonial owners in 1884 was 1,001, against 1,174 in 1883; while the tonnage was 497,442, as against 768,576, a decrease of more than 270,000 tons. This falling off took place almost entirely in steamers.

THREE STAGES OF LIFE.

ANTE-NUPTIAL.

Sweet love, I know that I must go!
[illegible] the noon of night is nigh;
Time [illegible] away and yet [illegible],
A lingering fever sweet and I—
Ah! how I hate to say good-by.

Good-night, my own! when you're alone,
[illegible] slumber seals those starry eyes,
Oh! give a tender thought to one
Who takes his leave of you with sighs,
[illegible] heart still beyond presence cries.

One kiss, ['illegible'] I wish for you
Dreams roseate and slumbers light.
The time is nigh, when you and I,
No more will need to say good-night.

NUPTIAL.

How radiant in her bridal dress!
How sweet the love-light in her eyes!
To-day she crowns my happiness,
And earth becomes a paradise.

I marvel, as I look upon
Her now, arrayed in beauty's pride,
By what strange [illegible] of love I won
This winsome angel for my bride.

And I need go from her no more,
Nor dread her irate father's frown,
When [illegible] from her at the door,
Nor hear his sudden coming down.

No more to leave her at the gate,
And sighing wander home alone,
For where she is—that's home, thank fate
She's mine at last, my wife, my own.

POST-NUPTIAL.

What's that you say? "'Tis folly's height
To try on me that played-out dodge
To come home at this time of night,
Pretending I've been at the lodge?"

Where—hic—do you suppose I've been?
"In some saloon?" You're quite a joker,
Ha! ha! what's that, you "ain't so green,
You know that I've been playing poker?"

"I'm chewing cloves?" yes, for a cough;
I've got a cold. What's that you said?
"Too bad?" O, yes; what now, "take off my boots before I go to bed?"

Of course, my dear, I quite forgot
I had 'em on. [illegible]—there they go.
"Take off my hat?" "I'm drunk?" I'm not.
I wonder at your talking so.

"You won't put up with"—hush that child,
The [illegible] disturbing little elf.
Oh, stop its noise, it sets me wild—
What's that?—hic—"hush the child myself?"

Well, let me have her—by-lo-by—
[illegible] I am in my stocking feet—
Safe in your papa's arms you lie;
By-lo my baby, slumber sweet.

And this is matrimonial life—
To walk the floor like this, alack!
He is a fool who takes a wife—
Great Scott! I've stepped upon a tack.

Great Julius Cæsar! look at that!
Oh, who would wed for love or pelf—
My foot!—Here, take this squalling brat
And try to rock it sleep yourself.

[illegible] "I'm a brute?" Oh, yes, of course—
[illegible] blasted tack! What's that — "I'm rude?"
"You'll sue at once for a divorce?"
I wish to goodness that you would.

AUNT MARGARET'S DREAM.

An Old Miser's Sudden Transformation.

A very quiet, orderly household we were at the farm after that wild, frolicsome, noisy Joe had gone back to his city life. He had only dragged through a month and a half of the summer at the dear, delightful old country home which he declared the whole place a bore but to tenth it had only been bored by him and packing up once more he went back to his work in the city, leaving everything more peaceful for his absence; all, perhaps, except two anxious yearning hearts that were fast growing sorrowful and old—one the mother's, the other father's. But little the high-spirited boy thought of that the morning he drove away from the old farm gate; his spirit, like the prancing horse the driver firmly held in check, was impatient to be off, to be freed from restraint. How hurriedly he told the old folks good-bye, and then as he dashed away threw a kiss from the tips of his fingers to his sister Nell, who stood and looked longingly after him. Oh, brothers, sons, too little you care for the tender, anxious hearts at home when you set sail upon an untried sea and venture out alone.

Several weeks passed away quietly and pleasantly, too, except for occasional [illegible] of news (bad news goes here, there and everywhere, you know) which found the way out to our country home, that Joe wasn't living just as he ought to do: rather too fast, too fond of drink and sometimes found at the gaming table. Poor Aunt Margaret, it seemed as if her face grew a little thinner, her hair a little whiter every day after that. I shall never forget how she looked one morning as we all sat around the breakfast table. Pushing her plate away, having scarcely tasted the food upon it, she said, looking up at uncle, who was himself in danger of falling into a brown study over his smoking muffins and steaks:

"Husband, couldn't you spare a little time to run up to the city in a day or two? I fear that things are going wrong with our boy some way. That was a queer dream I had last night—" and here she leaned her head upon her hand and looked down thoughtfully. "I thought that Joseph was standing on a precipice at a fearful height above a black, yawning sea, and that we were powerless to help him, but when I reached out my hand and shrieked for aid an ugly little dwarf came in sight, and, in answer to my entreaties, he said there was only one way to save my boy, and that was money; but even that effort would cost me the life of my other child, and then, as I threw up my hands in despair, a beautiful angel appeared at my side. At that instant I awoke."

"Tut, tut; there's nothing in dreams, wife. What could there be in such nonsense as that?" and uncle went on sipping his coffee, while Nellie glanced toward me with a strange, serious expression on her face, and then, with a cheerful smile at her mother, she said:

"Never mind, mother; you know 'tis said that dreams must go by contraries, and if so, Joseph is going to make us very happy about something."

Aunt Margaret shook her head sadly, but nothing more was said about the dream. I think, however, it did not quite pass out of anybody's mind, for late that afternoon, when the sound of the massive old door knocker resounded through the house, we all started nervously. A sigh of relief went round when Andrew returned to say that it was Mr. Wells to see Miss Nellie. Poor Nell, I think she had been longing for something to break the monotony of the day; she might have been glad if it had only been any other visitor than Mr. Wells. Uncle Ben sat in his big arm-chair reading the paper, but in no way ignorant of what was passing around him, so Nell did not dare refuse to go into the parlor. Mr. Wells was a neighbor farmer, you must understand. Pray don't let your imagination rush off into picturing some rustic young gallant of tender years and sentimental heart. No; such is not the beau who comes courting our Nellie to-day. There he is—a lank, grim-visaged little man slightly stooped about the shoulders, bending beneath the weight of the sixty years he had lived through, I guess. His thin, white hair hung in a most neglected fashion about his neck and ears, and the long white beard, flowing down upon his breast, added not a little toward making up the appearance of a patriarch. Wait a minute, worse than all this, he was a most miserable miser, and had already been twice married; and how could he dare set his heart on our fun-loving, innocent, kind-hearted Nell; she so gentle and child-like that we couldn't bear to have the house left a single day without her. Many times it had seemed strange to me why Uncle Ben would have Nellie receive Mr. Well's attention, and why he would persist in talking about what a fine catch the rich old man would be for any girl.

I had once or twice heard Aunt Margaret say that times were rather hard, and that uncle didn't always have a little ready change when it was wanted. Perhaps that was why he thought it best that Nellie should be, as he sometimes said, well married.

There was John Atherleigh, a nephew of Mr. Wells, the only child of his poor dead sister, to whom the wretched old miser never lent a helping hand. John was poor, but he was just as generous and good as any nobleman that ever lived. Somehow uncle didn't seem to be well pleased when he came about, as he often did, to walk with Nellie in the cool of the evening, down the long shady avenue, or sit by her side and talk out on the old stone steps leading up to the porch. The very old steps where, I guess, Nellie's mother and father sat together and talked of love and the happy, undiscovered future during the days of their honeymoon long, long ago. I used to think some times as I watched John and Nellie walk away how that it would be a pity to spoil that match, for John was just good enough for Nellie, and Nellie—well, she was entirely too good for anybody except John. All these reflections, and many more, passed through my mind while Nellie sat in the parlor and talked to her miserly old lover, and Aunt Margaret sat in her low rocking-chair, with her knitting lying idle on her lap, while uncle continued to read the news.

By and by another loud knock resounded through the house, and presently Andrew announced a visitor to see Mr. Brandon immediately. I looked at Aunt Margaret; she had clasped her hands nervously together. When uncle left the room she asked, almost beseechingly of me.

"I wonder who it can be, Margie, can you think?"

I knew her nervous state of anxiety, and determined at once to find out about the visitor, and, if possible, relieve her fears. I crept softly into the back parlor and up to the folding doors, which, owing to an arrangement of heavy curtains, was often left ajar, through which I hoped to get a sight of the visitor. I had no sooner stolen up to the door than I heard foot-steps in the hall, and uncle ushered his visitor into the room. It was too late to retreat, what could I do? To pass through into the front would be to intrude upon Nellie and her company; to come out from behind the curtain would be to appear like a spy; so there I stood stone still and waited. The first few minutes I was too much surprised and uneasy about my own situation to be aware of what was going on in the room, when at last I caught the sound of the stranger's voice; he was saying something like this:

"It is a very unfortunate piece of work, sir. I beg leave to sympathize with you and your family; but business is business you know. I was sent here to settle this matter in a respectable manner, if possible, and I must proceed to do it at once. Your son, I am sorry to tell you, sir, but perhaps you know he has lived a little fast of late—rather too fond of wine and evil company—"

"Yes, yes," uncle said, as if impatient to get at the worst.

"I am sorry to tell you, sir," the stranger continued, "but I think it happened while he was under the influence of liquor, and likely surrounded by his evil companions. To be brief, this is the whole story: Your son has broken into the money-safe and robbed his employer of $5,000."

"Robbed! O God, my boy a robber!"

I shall never forget the groans with which he sank back upon the chair, from which he had risen at this startling news.

"I own it looks bad, sir, but I have come to see if we can't arrange it somehow. His employer, you know, is your friend. He bid me say that he is not only willing but anxious to shield your family name from disgrace and your boy from the Penitentiary, if it can possibly be done. But the money must be refunded—there is no other course."

"Five thousand dollars! Impossible!" uncle exclaimed. "It would be to take everything—to ruin my family."

"I suppose nothing can be done, then," the stranger said, deliberately, and arose as if to depart.

"But wait a moment; let me think," uncle said, leaning his head forward on the table by which he sat. By and by, getting up, he said: "I will see what can be done," and left the room. I was trying in vain to think what he could be about, when suddenly he reentered the room, accompanied by Mr. Wells. Alas, I thought of that miserly old man as our only means of help. Then they all three talked together in a low tone of voice. I could only understand a word now and then of uncle's tremulous voice. Putting it all together, I knew he meant this: Joe must not be sent to the Penitentiary; that would kill Aunt Margaret. The farm—the old homestead—I know was so dear to him must go before that should be done. Would Mr. Wells advance the money? Taking uncle's arm, he drew him aside, so near by the curtain beneath which I stood concealed I thought they could almost hear my breathing, his voice was low, subdued to a whisper, but I caught the name of Nellie; something should be done if Nellie would consent. Great Heavens! I thought and shuddered, can it be possible he will ask for Nellie's hand in return for that? Will uncle sell one child to buy another!

"I can not tell; it shall not be unless she is willing," Uncle said, and left the room. It seemed like an age to me that I stood there trembling with indignation and horror. If she is willing! Will they let her be the sacrifice to save themselves, and then say that she is willing; but then I thought of poor Aunt Margaret, with bowed head and broken heart; something must be done for her. Yes, after all, it would be a noble thing for Nellie to do.

Just then she entered the room with her father. I caught sight of her face—she knew it all. I had never seen her look like that before. I am sure uncle did not realize the extent of the sacrifice his daughter was about to make. I would not wrong him by supposing that he did.

"She is here to affirm that she is willing," uncle said. The stranger looked up in bewildered perplexity. Mr. Wells came forward to meet Nellie, saying:

"You have been made aware of the importance of this step. I suppose there is no time for needless harangue about the matter; if Joe is saved your father must go to-morrow morning with the money. Of course I have no need of the place and do not want it; but if you will consent to an early marriage"—and here the old man winced a little, perhaps because he couldn't entirely forget the stranger's presence—"I am willing to make you a dowry of the amount, in cash, the value of the farm; understand, however, that the wedding shall take place immediately."

"I am ready," was all Nellie answered. Oh how her white, wretched face and hollow voice smote upon my heart. I thought I could scarcely wait until the stranger, who had now accomplished his mission, was ready to depart. Then Nellie, with both hands up to her face, ran out of the room. A few minutes later uncle went out, followed by Mr. Wells, the latter saying something about returning with a minister.

My blood fairly boiled. I rushed out of the room into the yard—I wanted to breathe the fresh air; I was almost stifled with indignation and anger. Scarcely conscious of where I was going, I wandered among the trees some distance down toward the gate. When coming suddenly out upon the drive I found myself directly in front of Mr. Wells, who was slowly driving out. Politely lifting his hat, he stopped his horse for me to pass, but I found it utterly impossible to move a step without first giving vent to some of my angry feelings.

"Sir," I said, marshaling my courage and endeavoring to appear undismayed, "is it indeed possible that you are so lost to every manly sentiment of regard for the esteem and respect of your fellow beings as to compel a woman to marry you, and that when you know she abhors the very ground you walk upon? You know as well as I can tell you that Nellie and John love each other dearly, and if she were married to you a thousand times she will always love him just the same."

With that I was satisfied, and without waiting for a reply I rushed back into the house. Uncle and Nellie were bending over Aunt Margaret, who had swooned away. When at last she returned to consciousness, it seemed as if she would break her heart with weeping, first about Joe then about Nellie. But Nellie kept up so bravely and tried hard to appear as if she didn't think it would be much of a sacrifice after all, that gradually we all grew calm and began to make ready for the wedding. What a mockery it was, I thought, but something must be done to make things look a little cheerful. I gathered some fresh flowers for the vases and arranged things about the house with as much neatness and care as my drooping spirits would permit of. Promptly at eight o'clock there came a knock at the door. We were all standing around in Aunt Margaret's room looking as wretched as possible, Nellie, dressed in a plain white muslin, trying to look cheerful, but making a miserable failure—when, to our great surprise, Mr. Wells, unannounced, walked into the room, accompanied by his nephew, John Atherleigh.

"Miss Nellie," he began, without waiting to be spoken to, "my feelings have undergone a great change since I saw you this afternoon, partly owing to a certain little affair. You can ask your Cousin Margie here about it some time. But my feelings have been so greatly changed that I should not even be willing to marry you now. Of course I haven't been blind to the fact that you and John have loved each other all along; and now, if you are willing to exchange grooms it will be all right. I couldn't bear to think of having a wife who would be in love with a young scape-grace like this as long as she lived. I have made over a deed of the place equally divided between you and John. It shall be a bridal present from the old uncle. I am able to give it, you know. Now, are you willing to make the exchange?" And the poor old man actually smiled, as if in scorn of himself.

"Are you willing, Nellie?" John asked, holding out both hands to her. How she slipped her hands into them and cried as if her heart would break; but we all knew they were tears of joy. Very quietly I stole over to Aunt Margaret's side and whispered: Nellie is saved; the old miser has surely turned to a saint.

"It is my dream, my dream!" Aunt Margaret said; "was not the little black dwarf indeed become an angel?"

"I guess we had as well have it all over and be done with it," Mr. Wells continued, rubbing his hands as if well pleased with himself and everybody else. "I've been with John and got the license, the deed is all made out, and the preacher is already in the parlor."

You may be sure the sorrowful faces of a few minutes ago brightened up at this strange turn of affairs, and joyfully enough we all repaired to the parlor, where Nellie and John were united in marriage. You should have seen dear Aunt Margaret's face when she kissed the bride. Didn't we all kiss her, though—no, not all. Mr. Wells—I mean never to call him a miserly old wretch or say other ugly names again. However, I don't think he had anything to do with this piece of mercy. I regard it as a special interference of Providence. But I am getting away from the subject. Did he kiss her? No. But this is the reason why. Nellie went straight up, and, putting both arms around him, kissed him right heartily. I am sure, had he been the bridegroom, she would never have kissed him like that.

What a perfect picture of self-satisfaction the old man was after that, but he had the good grace to remain only a little while after the ceremony. Of course we were all dying to talk about the strange things that had happened. I could not help thinking, as we all cast kind, grateful glances after his retreating figure, how much happier he must be than if he had gotten the unwilling little bride, with the knowledge that she and everybody else was miserable about it. How happy we would have been after that, except for poor, erring Joe. Uncle went to the city the next morning and did not return for two days. His face was dark and solemn when he came into the old home again, but no one dared to question him; it was late in the evening, and we had waited supper for his coming. Very quickly we gathered around the table and bowed our heads, while uncle asked a blessing. Suddenly a shadow fell across the doorway, and when we raised our heads imagine what surprise we felt—there stood the truant boy Joe. Aunt Margaret sprang to her feet.

"Don't come to meet me yet, mother," he said, "until I show you that I have not forfeited all claim to your respect and love; that everything was not so bad as you have thought. I didn't steal that money, or ever meant to steal it. I am willing to acknowledge my share of the wrong; it was getting into bad company and drinking too much whisky, but I have not been guilty of stealing anything they have proven. After I had been drinking freely and made a fool of myself, as liquor always makes me do, the boys dragged me into the plan they had already fixed upon, and until I was too drunk to know anything, they hurried me away with them; but they have been found. It is all cleared up now, and father shant lose anything by me."

"Thank the blessed Lord for that," Aunt Margaret said, and, putting both arms around him, she drew him into the room. You may be sure a great burden's weight was lifted from our hearts when we heard Joe's story through, and how thankful we were that he had been saved, and that Nellie was saved. I shudder yet to think how near they were to the precipice beneath which yawned the dark, dreadful sea of Aunt Margaret's dream. But the angel's wing has turned the darkness into light, our sorrow into joy.—Jane Prentice, in Louisville Courier-Journal.

MATRIMONY.

The President of the Lime Kiln Club Indulges in a Few Reflections.

"I should like to spoke a few remarks to Brudder Side Bar Skinner," observed the President, as the dust began to settle in Paradise Hall.

Brother Skinner, who is a young man of twenty-three, with a mild eye and lilac necktie, advanced to the front and the President continued:

"Brudder Skinner, de news has reached my ears dat you am about to be mar'd. I trus' dat de report am true, bekase I believe it am de dooty of ebery young man who kin support a wife to take one."

"It am true, sah."

"Den let me compliment you wid one hand, an' spoke a few remarks to you wid de odder. Gittin' mar'd has its werry serious side. Fur instance, am de gal gwine to mar'y you bekase she loves you, or to spite her folkes bekase dey kept her away from de skatin' r'nk? Am you gwine to mar'y de gal fur love, or bekase her father has some wealth which you hope he'll shell out fur your benefit?

"Love am a powerful emoshun, Brudder Skinner, but love widout pork and 'taters to keep it goin' am like de froth on top of sodawater.

"Don't mistake your sentiments. If you am sartin dat you love, go ahead. If it am only lolipop, hire out as a deck hand on a steamboat fur a week, an' it will all go away. I hev known couples ez seemed to be dyin' of love. Dor silly ackshuns made 'em de laffin'-stock of a hull nayburhood. Dey seemed to dote and dote, but it didn't last. Arter a couple of y'ars de husband war a home grumbler an' tyrant, an' de wife a gadabout an' a scold. What dey s'posed was love war only lollypop.

"Don't marry a gal hopin' dat her father will set you up in de barber bizness. Most fadder-in-laws not only want all dey hez got, but am willin' to struggle fur another $20,000.

"Doan' sot down an' figger dat fo' taters, a loaf of bread, half a pound of meat an' a quart of applesass am goin' to run you fur a week. You will all de salary you kin ai'rn, an' need you had better look aroun' an' find somebody who will lend you a dollar now an' then.

"Doan' flatter yerselves dat all you hev got to do am to hang ta de house an' kiss ober de gate. "Touring" Abroad.

The St. James' Gazette says: "The habit of 'touring' abroad seems to be growing in favor among English sportsmen as well as among those of other countries. Although the coming cricket season at home is not to be signalized by the advent of any foreign eleven, it appears that a couple of British teams are intending to travel in search of winter cricket. Both will visit America. This is probably due to the extreme courtesy and 'good form' which was so consistently shown by the Philadelphia gentlemen who visited us last year. Every club, we believe, which met the Philadelphians thoroughly enjoyed the friendly contest; and in fact the latter fully justified their title to their name. A team of south of England gentlemen will sail for America at the end of August, and will include R. T. and R. J. Thornton, Hine-Haycock, the old Dark Blue, T. W. Welman, and W. Fowler, the old Cambridge fast bowler. The other team will be composed of Scotch gentlemen, who will also sail in August. Doubtless both elevens will have thoroughly enjoyable trips among a people so hospitable as the Americans."

THE LATEST WRINKLE.

A prominent stationer is authority for the statement that a lively trade in the manufacture of seals has recently been developed at the East, and is gradually working its way westward. He has just returned from a business trip to Philadelphia, and there collected some facts bearing on the latest craze. In conversing on seals and wax he said: "A complete outfit, such as has been made and offered for sale two or three months past, consists of a silver tray, oxydized or polished, of unique design, hammered or plain, with a match box to fit, a little bundle of adamantine tapers two and a half inches in length, half a dozen sticks of wax in as many hues and odors, and a pretty box to hold them and the little silver spirit-lamp which liquifies the sealing material. The seal is not included, except in certain complicated bronze or silver pattern, such as lizard or alligator designs. If the material is solid silver the outfit is worth all the way from $20 to $50. A very fashionable and equally ugly plated sort can be purchased for $15. Lately, to meet the demand which has spread to the less fashionable portions of society, a cheap outfit, costing but seventy-five cents, has been made, consisting of a neat pasteboard box containing the same articles.

"The seal most in use is a German text initial placed upon a plain field and inclosed in plain concentric circles or surrounded by a criss-cross tinting. Some ladies, exceedingly democratic in their notions, use an English initial. Others have two or three letter monograms. Crests are very fashionable. Mottoes surmounted by the armorial crest of the family are correct in taste and more extensively ordered now than six months ago. After the circle the shields is the outline most frequently called for. The dealers are often asked to select designs for purchasers. A lady who boasts of a great pedigree recently asked a clerk to assist her. Picking up 'Burke's Heraldry' he turned to the given name and showed his customer a coat-of-arms which he thought fitted her ancestry. Looking at it an instant, she said:

"'I like that seal well. I believe I'll order one. But can't you put an alligator or easel or something that's now all the rage into that vacant space in the corner of the shield? It would help to fill up, you know.'

"There are about twenty different perfumes and colors in wax, and as many as a dozen shades in red, from the deepest Indian red to a bright scarlet."

"Is there any significance in the color employed to seal the letter?"

"There is. Flirtations in selling wax are the latest racket. The ordinary red wax signifies business, and is supposed to be used only for business letters. Black is, of course, used for mourning and condolence. Blue means love, and as we make four or five tints of this color each stage of the tender passion can be accurately portrayed. When pink is used congratulation is intended. An invitation to a wedding or other festivity is sealed with white wax. Variegated colors are supposed to show conflicting emotions. Do you suppose that thimbles are being utilized to bear seals? Fact. The designs of that sort are mild just now but are developing. We'll work the idea up, and think it will become fashionable.

"The odors used in the wax are ravishing in their delicacy—that is the expensive sort. The cheaper grades are as bad as the pomatum in a five-cent barber shop. The perfumery is the element of cost in the wax. A Paris firm makes the finest imported article. The perfume of the burning wax fills an ordinary-sized apartment and lingers about the envelope for hours."—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

BERT'S THREE WRONG STEPS.

How the First Led to the Second, and They to the Third.

"Here, Bert," said mamma one day; "here are six almonds for you and six for little sister Louise." She put his six almonds in one pocket, and Louise's in another. "Now," she said, "before you eat yours, go and find Louise, and give her her six; then you may eat them together."

"Yes, ma'am," said Bert, trotting off on two happy bare feet, out into grandfather's big country yard. He meant to mind mamma, but, as you will see, like many another child who did not mean to do wrong, he did not mean it quite hard enough.

For when, after looking only a little while for Louise, he could not find her, he concluded to rest himself in his hunt by eating just one of his almonds; no, two. So he sat down on the root of an oak and took two out of his pocket. Crack—crack—crack! you would have thought a whole nest of squirrels were at work, and pretty soon the hulls of six almonds lay scattered around him!

This was the first of the three wrong steps that I set out to tell you about, for the little boy was disobeying mamma by eating almonds before he found Louise; that was bad enough, but the great trouble about wrong steps is that you can hardly ever take one at a time, they do follow one another so fast. The best way is never to take the first one. Then you will never take the second.

Bert hunted a little while longer for Louise, but I'm afraid it was a very easy hunt, for she was only down in the orchard, sitting in the crotch of the June apple-tree, reading the book which she had got the week before at the Sunday-school library.

"I wonder if mamma didn't give Louise more than six," Bert said to himself after awhile; and then he took his second wrong step, by handling and coveting what didn't belong to him; for he took Louise's almonds out and began to count them over and play with them; then he thought he'd crack them for her, and maybe he'd find a double one.

Ah! the third wrong step, the worst one, followed very fast, for almost before he knew it Louise's almonds were gone. You may be sure he felt very unhappy about it, and he got more and more miserable as he saw Louise's little pink sun-bonnet coming towards him from the orchard. If he only could have undone what he had done a little before, how happy he would have been. But that could not be; and he waited silently till Louise spoke to him.

"Why, Bert," she said, noticing at once the litter of hulls; "didn't mamma send me any? I'll run and get mine."

Bert let her go; he felt too much ashamed to tell about it. But of course he had to tell at last, foolish little boy! Mamma was very angry, but more distressed than angry, and Bert was not allowed to have any dessert for dinner, or any molasses for breakfast, or any preserves for supper, or any candy or nuts, for two whole weeks.

Those two weeks seemed long to the little boy; but I hope he had time, as the days went by, to think over those three wrong steps, and to see what a pity it was that he took the first one.—Elizabeth P. Allan, in S. S. Times.

A Little Dog's Dinner.

"My table is set. Please give me my dinner." This is what the little dog means, though his way of saying it is "Bow-wow-wow!"

His mistress feeds him in the dining-room. But she is careful of her carpet; so she keeps a large napkin, or towel, to spread over it. There is a bowl, too, that is the little dog's especial property. His dinner is always put into it, and the bowl and napkin are kept in a cupboard that he can reach.

He has watched his mistress when she spread the cloth, and set the bowl on it, till he has learned to do it himself.

At dinner-time, when he hears the plates and goblets jingling in the china-closet, he goes to his cupboard, and opens the door with his paw. He takes his table-cloth in his mouth, shakes it out, and spreads it on the carpet, with his mouth and paws. He brings the bowl, and sets it down in the middle of the cloth. Then he barks, to say that his table is ready.

But he does not keep barking, as if he meant to tease for his dinner. He sits down by the bowl, and waits quietly and patiently till it is given to him.

He eats it pretty fast, and the family say he wipes his mouth on his napkin. Of course he does, for he noses all around the bowl, to pick up any stray bits that may have fallen over outside. Then he scampers off. He never waits to fold his table-cloth and wash his dish, but leaves that for somebody else to do.—Mrs. Mary Johnson, in Our Little Ones.

ESQUIMAU CANDY.

The Far Northern Substitute for Civilized Sweetmeats.

It would seem very strange, and perhaps not very pleasant, to my young readers to hear a tallow candle or the shin-bone of a reindeer called candy. And yet these things may really be considered as Esquimau candy, because they would delight the children of the cold in precisely the way that a box of bon-bons would delight you.

There is a certain kind of water-fowl in Arctic regions known as the dovekie. It is about the size of a duck, is quite black, has a prominent white stripe on its wings, and its webbed feet are of a brilliant red. When sitting in rows on the edge of greenish rock, these little red feet are very conspicuous. Sometimes, when the men have killed a number of dovekies, the Esquimau women cut off the bright red feet, draw out the bones, and, blowing into the skins, distend them as much as possible so as to form pouches. When these pouches are thoroughly dried they are filled with reindeer tallow, and the bright red packages, which I assure you look much nicer than they taste, are little Boreas' candy. In very cold weather the Esquimau children eat great quantities of fat and blubber; and this fatty food, which seems to us so uninviting, helps to keep them warm and well.

The only other kind of candy that the Esquimau children have is the marrow from the long leg or side bone of the slaughtered reindeer. Of this, also, they are very fond. Whenever a reindeer is killed and the meat has been stripped from the bones of the legs, these bones are placed on the floor of the igloo and cracked with a hatchet until the marrow is exposed. The bones are then forced apart with the hands, and the marrow is dug out of the ends with a long, sharp and narrow spoon made from a walrus' tusk. I have eaten this reindeer marrow frozen and cooked, and after one becomes accustomed to eating frozen meat raw, it is really an acceptable tid-bit; while cooked and nicely served it would be a delicacy anywhere.—Lieutenant Frederick Schwatka, in St. Nicholas.

ARE YOU READY?

The Kind of Boy Always in Demand, and for Whom a Place Is Waiting.

You are looking for a place and a work in the world. Are you ready for them? If you are, you may be sure they are waiting for you. Thousands of men are looking for situations, but it is astonishing how difficult it is to find the right man when there is a place to be filled. A host of men want it, but not one in a hundred is ready for it.

Readiness implies something more than willingness to roll up one's sleeves. It means ability to do the thing required with skill, zeal and absolute fidelity. A merchant wants a clerk; he can fill the place twenty times over with good, steady-going, well-meaning humdrums; he will be lucky if he finds in half a year the boy who will take all thought of the place off his mind by the energy, capacity and general intelligence he brings into it.

There is an opening in a newspaper office, and the need is advertised. There is at once a host of applicants; out of them twenty-five young men can be selected who will do the work set before them fairly well; but the young man who will really fill the place and expand it, who will overflow with vitality, freshness and life, must be searched for far and wide, as with a lighted candle.

Those select workmen, who add to general good intentions the concentration and the mastery which go with high power, are the men for whom the world is looking, and for whom there is always a place. They survive financial crises and outlive hard times because they are indispensable; if their employers go to the wall they rarely wait long for another opportunity.

The only sure road to success runs past the door of the boy who has made up his mind to do one thing and to do it with all his might; to focus himself on it and pour himself into it. Whatever you decide to do, qualify yourself for it by mastering every detail of it; fling yourself heart and soul into it. Are you ready?—Golden Days.

DEFEATED BY WOMEN.

The Detroit Man Who Had His Life Crushed Out of Him.

They will never forgive him—no, never. There were ten men on one side of the car, and only five women on the other, but each woman occupied as good as two seats and was determined not to "hitch along" for even a cyclone. Pretty soon the car stopped for another woman. As she entered the door she stood for a moment to see where she should sit down. One of the men rose up, pointed his finger, and called out in a hearty voice:

"Plenty of room on the other side, madam."

She sat down between two of the women, and this caused the whole row to move. They didn't stab her with a poisoned hair-pin, nor did they each sit and gaze at her hat and decide that she had trimmed up an old frame with twelve shillings' worth of new material. On the contrary, the vengeful five fastened their eyes upon the bold outlaw. They expressed indignation, contempt, disgust and revenge in their looks. They saw the dandruff on his coat-collar. They saw the hole in his left boot. They noticed the strawberry stain on his shirt-bosom. They detected the fact that he had changed his cuffs end for end. All this, and then they looked him dead in the eyes and convicted him of bigamy, burglary, horse-stealing and robbing a blind man. He bore up for three squares, but then he gave a sort of shiver, made a bolt for the front door and was over the chain and on the sidewalk before any one of the five could draw a revolver.—Detroit Free Press.

S. P. Chase.

Salmon Portland Chase took his seat on the bench of the Supreme Court as Chief-Justice on the 15th of December, 1864. There was a select but distinguished group of lawyers within the bar, Thomas Ewing and Reverdy Johnson conspicuous among them, and on the seats reserved for spectators were Mr. Chase's daughters, his son-in-law, Senator Sprague, Senator Sumner, Representative Hooker, with other notable personages. Precisely at eleven o'clock the Marshal announced "The Supreme Court of the United States," and the venerable men entered, wearing their flowing black silk robes, headed by the new Chief-Justice, whose manner was almost imperial as he was escorted to the central chair by the senior Justice, Judge Wayne. The other Justices ranged themselves on either side, in order of seniority, and the formal proclamation was made: "Oyez! Oyez!" The members of the bar, who had risen, bowed respectfully and the court returned the salutation. Judge Wayne then handed to the new Chief-Justice the prescribed oath of office, which he read impressively, and as he concluded, he added, raising his right hand: "So help me God!" The Clerk then read the Chief-Justice's commission, signed Abraham Lincoln, and the business proceeded. There was a hum of congratulation among the spectators, who soon left, as did the lawyers who were not retained in the cases to be heard that day.—Ben: Perley Poore.

Carter Harrison has been counted in as Mayor of Chicago by a majority of 375, just squeezed in as it were.

The resignation of President White, president of Cornell university, is announced and it is also said that Dr. C. K. Adams, Michigan university, is likely to succeed him.

Jeff Davis expresses the opinion that Americans are "dancing upon a volcano." If the sixth foster had been made to dance upon a volcano twenty years ago, he would not have such gloomy forebodings respecting the Nation he attempted to demolish.

A prohibitory liquor law creates a great amount of sickness. The druggists at Topeka, Kas., during the first eight weeks after the new Prohibitory law went into effect in that State, filed 11,800 prescriptions for whiskey, averaging a pint each one. [illegible] The population of Topeka is 15,000. This exceeds the ratio of sick to well people during the epidemic [illegible] in Pennsylvania.

George William Curtis, in Harper's Weekly, has finally reached the conclusion that the action of the Administration in the matter of appointments is not consistent. In this respect the Administration is good [illegible] the editor and late delegate who assisted in naming the Republican candidates at Chicago a year ago and then went back on them.

The Pall Mall Gazette has an editorial article [illegible] to be inspired by M. Lessar, of the Russian section of the Afghan boundary [illegible], and couched in angry terms. It says unless the Marquis of Salisbury wishes to deepen the conviction of Russia that his ministry is a menace of war, he will cancel the appointment of Lord Randolph Churchill as secretary of state for India. "Russia," continues the article, "already regards the Salisbury cabinet with such suspicion and [illegible] that [illegible] may cause such a [illegible] of the negotiations now in progress as will result in war."

The length of the present session of the legislature exceeds by seven days that of any other legislature of the state of Michigan. The sessions of 1881 and 1883 [illegible] 158 days, and previous to that time the sessions were a little shorter. [illegible] the state has been growing all these years and more matters have come [illegible] legislative consideration. Each [illegible] legislature will probably sit a few days longer than its immediate predecessor [illegible] in course of time it will become [illegible] to hold annual sessions. It may be possible to transact legislative business in a much shorter time than has been customary, but the [illegible] to do it have not yet been discovered.

Mr. Bakewell, an eminent English geologist, gave personal attention to the problem as early as 1830, and, from everything he could learn at that time, estimated that the falls had receded about a hundred and twenty feet in the forty years preceding. He returned to the problem again in 1846, 1851, 1856 (American Journal of Science, January, 1857, pp. 87, 231), and was each time confirmed in the belief that the apex of the horseshoe fall was receding, on an average, three feet a year. On the other hand, Sir Charles Lyell, upon his first visit, in 1841, "conceived (upon what basis he does not tell us) that, at the utmost, the rate could not be more than one foot a year."

Science has an article giving the details of the inoculation experiments made in Spain, and reported to the French Academy, says "[illegible] writer draws these conclusions from his experiments, and offers to reproduce his results before the Academy. 1st. Cholerization is possible in man, as in animals, by hypodermic injection. 2d. That the prophylaxis of cholerization is obtained through graduated [illegible] or attenuated virus." Science adds, as its own opinion, "These experiments are said to have been carried on further, but no proper report of them has yet reached us. Our criticism would be that the conclusion as to the efficacy of inoculation against cholera, granting that the true bacillus of cholera was used, is an exceedingly hasty one, inasmuch as the protected (?) persons have not yet been brought in contact with the disease."

Postmaster General Vilas has refused to appoint James P. Ryan postmaster at Appleton, Wisconsin, because Mr. Ryan is publisher of a Democratic newspaper and Mr. Vilas says that he removes Republicans for being "offensive partisans," he cannot stultify himself by appointing a Democratic newspaper editor, who is notoriously an "offensive partisan." If this sort of thing is to prevail, the editors of Democratic local party organs, who generally have worked under a supposition that Democratic success would reward them with the local offices, will be apt to kick vigorously. They will make themselves very "offensive partisans" of somebody else for Mr. Vilas' place in the cabinet, and not half as "offensive" as usual for another Democratic victory. However, this is a neat bit of humbug from the genial Vilas, who really has a personal objection to the Democratic editor, and wants to get credit for being consistent and non-partisan while merely gratifying his own spite.—Post.

FUN AT WEDDINGS.

"Yes," said a Boston clergyman, "more ludicrous incidents and queer mistakes happen in connection with weddings or marriages than I ever noticed in connection with any of my other work. There are times when I have difficulty in keeping my countenance straight, and of course you would't like to be laughed at by the minister just as he was about to join you solemnly in wedlock with the lady you loved. The most trying time I ever had was when I was young in the ministry, and when I had not such control over my keen sense of the ludicrous as I have since acquired. I was located at Houlton, Me. One day a couple drove over from Woodstock, N. B., and when they arrived in the village began inquiring for a minister. Some of the mischief-loving boys got hold of them, and took them down to the market, where they were placed on exhibition and plied with all sorts of ridiculous questions, to the great amusement of the crowd, and without embarrassment to themselves, for they were too green to appreciate the joke. Finally, after everybody had had his fill of fun, the bride and groom were escorted to my house by a few of the most mischievous of the crowd. It was all I could do to keep from roaring when they entered, but I felt that I must maintain my dignity, not only for the sake of the bride and groom, but because some of the young men present were members of my congregation, and if I yielded to my feelings then I might have difficulty in restraining myself when I faced them from the pulpit. The woman was the tallest, most awkward, and most fantastic female I ever saw. She was six feet and two inches high, and dressed in all the bright-colored toggery she could get on, without regard to harmony or style of make. But one article struck me so forcibly and was thrust on my attention so prominently that I forgot all the other details. She had a hand which came nearly answering the description 'as large as a codfish,' and these were enclosed in a pair of thick yarn mittens, which make every finger look as big as a potato. The man was a diminutive half-breed, Indian and French, and he had no vest or collar on, and his pants were held up by a lumberman's leather belt, fastened with an old, rusty iron buckle. I managed to get through the ceremony, however, and relieved my feelings after they had gone.

"I remember a bashful fellow who came to my house with his girl to get married. He was so bashful that I pitied him. He was absolutely overwhelmed—paralyzed, I ought to say. He came into the parlor with his hat on, and did not remove it once, despite all the hints that his bride and I gave him. I said all the assuring things I could, and tried to engage him and his lady in conversation, but he was so abashed that he could neither answer nor move. I hinted that he stand beside his lady, but he was so frightened that he did not understand. Finally, in despair, I said quietly and privately to the bride: 'If you will take your place beside the groom I will marry you,' and when she approached him it seemed absolutely to startle him with a new fright.

"One young man, who came on the same errand, was struck with curiosity the moment he entered the room. He absolutely ignored his bride, while he wandered about the parlor, scrutinizing in a wondering way every picture, every book, ornament, and piece of furniture in the room. The bride sat and blushed, while I tried to call his attention to the business of the moment, but he kept on, and it was more than fifteen minutes before I could get the two corraled near enough together to marry them.

"I married a queer couple once, a short time before I came to Boston. The man had just entered upon his profession which we will call that of a physician, and had determined upon his place of settlement. The young lady, a bright, intelligent, well-educated girl, who knew the ways of society, had made up her mind that she would marry a doctor, and finally she had brought matters round in a quiet, womanly way to the point of his asking for her hand and heart, and of course she yielded. The acquaintance had been astonishingly brief. They were hardly acquainted when I was summoned to marry them. He was very skillful and devoted to his profession, which he had mastered well for a young man in theory and practice. But he knew less of the ways of the world and customs of social life than any other man I ever met. He was on the point of starting for his new home the very next day after the marriage, and, with the utmost unconcern regarding the proprieties of the occasion, had packed up all his apparel ready for the journey. He was stopping at the house of a friend, who, at the last moment, late in the afternoon, discovered that the bridegroom did not have a change of linen to dress with. Hurried consultations were had, and his hostess, with a woman's readiness for emergencies, took the measure of his collar and waist, went down just as the stores were about to close, and purchased the desired articles, which the bridegroom accepted with the utmost equanimity and as if the articles were not of much consequence anyway. They went away, and in a few days the bride wrote a letter to one of her friends, in which she remarked with charming naïvete: 'We had a good, pleasant journey, and I found my husband to be quite entertaining. I think I shall like him first-rate when I get acquainted with him.'

"The license question often causes embarrassment to couples about to wed. I remember once a couple came from St. John, New Brunswick, to Bangor, thinking to be married there quietly, and away from home, go further west on their wedding tour, and return to their home after the honeymoon was over. They came in on the evening train, went to one of the best hotels, and, as they intended to be married that evening, registered as man and wife. They went to their room, brushed off the dust and otherwise made themselves presentable, and having found out that I was a clergyman, came to my residence to have the ceremony performed. Upon my asking for their papers, they first made the discovery that a license was necessary. I was perfectly satisfied from the documents they had with them, as well as from their personal appearance, that they were all right, but of course I had no legal right to marry them. The astonished hotel clerk probably never knew why separate rooms were called for on their return, especially as there seemed to be no quarrel nor misunderstanding of any kind.

"A case recently occurred in Boston which caused a deal of embarrassment for the moment to the bride, and a quantity of merriment for everybody else. Some seventy-five guests had assembled at the residence of the bride's father, and an elaborate wedding supper had been provided. The time, until 9:30 or later, was spent in receiving the guests, in introductions, and in social conversation. Then the whole company were assembled in the special parlors, and I took my place ready to pronounce the words which should bind two hearts together. The bride and groom marched in, and as they came in front of me the groom handed me the license. But there was only one. He lived in Cambridge, and as he was to be married in Boston he had forgotten to obtain a license from the Cambridge city clerk. I was sorry, but there was no help for it. I informed them that I could not marry them without the Cambridge license, but suggested a note from the city clerk to me promising to issue the license the next day. Well, a carriage was called and a messenger sent to find the city clerk, who was in bed, and the necessary promise obtained, so that the ceremony was performed about midnight. The young man was subjected to jokes and jibes from everybody present, but he stood it like a martyr."—Boston Globe.

MOUND-BUILDERS' ERA.

A correspondent writes from Randolph, N. Y., to the New York Times as follows: There are in this place and vicinity very remarkable reminders of the mound-builders' era, in the form of peculiar elevations and "hummocks," several of which have been opened from time to time and many interesting relics taken from them. Near the mouth of Cattaraugus creek commences a series of works that extends to the Conewango valley. Between Lake Erie and Dayton, Chautauqua county, are the remains of a circular sepulchral mound. The mound has an elevation of 10 feet, and is 120 feet in circumference. According to antiquaries, this mound must have been the mausoleum of some great warrior. In the towns of Lear and Conewango excavations were made some years ago in several of these mounds. In one of them eight skeletons were found. They were in a sitting posture and arranged in a circle. Large blocks of mica were found in some of the mounds among the skeletons. This material is found so frequently in these burial mounds that it is believed to have been regarded as a sacred relic by the extinct race whose work still remains in the most gigantic of earthworks all over this continent. A mound was once opened in the center of Randolph village. Three skeletons were found in it, and a beautiful specimen of mica. On this mound was a tree three feet in diameter, the roots of which had grown down into the ancient sepulcher and entwined themselves about the skeletons. When the first settlers came to this vicinity the remains of many fortifications, mounds, caches, hearths, and other evidences of the extinct race were well defined. Many of these are still in such preservation as to present a record at once interesting and intelligent to the antiquarian student. Near the station of the New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio railroad is a peculiar earth formation which was designed by those who fashioned it thousands of years ago to represent a serpent, according to the conclusion of those who have read the customs of the mound-builders by the monuments they have left. This particular formation is 125 feet long, and enthusiastic antiquaries who visit it are unanimous in the resemblance it presents to a snake basking in the sunshine. A farmer, on whose land this symbol is situated, was plowing near the head of the serpent a few years since. This stump was eight feet in circumference, and was undoubted evidence of the mound's great age. The farmer, in plowing around the end of the mound, struck his plow against a projecting root of the pine. It raised up the earth for a foot beneath it, and several flint arrow-heads, of a pattern and finish much superior to the later Indian barbs, were uncovered. The mound was explored for a short distance, and 170 of the flint arrows were found all in a heap by themselves. Several stone axes and many specimens of mica were also found. In others of these mounds, all covered with trees of large size, [illegible] have been found, some of them containing parched corn. These mounds are traced from Randolph down the Allegheny river to the Ohio, and westward to Lake Superior, and thence into Wisconsin, where the most remarkable mounds on the continent exist. Antiquaries outline six [illegible] [illegible] parallelograms, one great circle, and an immense effigy of the human figure. The mastodon is one of the animals outlined, which, taken in connection with the fact that remains of that animal have been unearthed in nearly all of the localities where [illegible] are found, has led at least one antiquary—Prof. Laklin, of this place, whose contributions on the subject are well known to the scientific world, to adopt the theory that the mound-builders made the mastodon subject to their wills, as the elephant and horse are to the races of to-day. Many remains of mastodons have been found in the Conewango valley.

The Haytian People.

"They hate their fathers and despise their mothers," is a saying which is the key to the character of the mulatto. Of the mulatto women it is rather more difficult to speak. They are rarely good-looking, never beautiful. As they approach the white type they have long, rather coarse hair, beautiful teeth, small, fleshless hands and feet, delicate forms and sometimes graceful movements, due apparently to the length of the lower limbs. Their principal defects are their voices, their noses and sometimes the inordinate size of their lower jaw. Their voices are harsh, their skins blotchy or of a dirty brown, their noses flat or too fleshy and the jaw, as I have said, heavy. Occasionally you see a girl decidedly pretty, who would pass in any society, but these are rare. In general they are very plain, particularly when you approach the black type, when the frizzled hair begins to appear.—Gath in the Cincinnati Enquirer.

The looms used in the manufacture of silk in New Jersey are said to be almost fac similes of those employed for the same purpose in India and China.

THE PURITAN.

Mr. Curtis' Oration at the Unveiling of the Pilgrim Statue.

The bronze statue of "The Pilgrim," by J. Q. A. Ward the sculptor, was unveiled in Central Park, New York, a few days ago, in the presence of the New England Society of New York and many distinguished persons, among them ex-President Arthur, representatives from New England societies, and a large concourse of citizens.

The statue is heroic in size, placed upon a granite pedestal with bronze panels. It is that of a man about forty years of age, standing erect and looking away toward the west. He is attired in the old pilgrim garb, and one hand rests on the muzzle of a wheel-lock musket.

The ceremonies began with prayer by Assistant Bishop Potter. Then followed an address by Park Commissioner Beekman, the singing of Mrs. Heman's hymn "Pilgrim Fathers," by chorus societies of New York and Brooklyn, the unveiling of the statue by Mr. Ward, its presentation to the New England Society by Daniel F. Appleton, Chairman of the Monument Committee, its formal transfer to the city of New York on behalf of the society by General Stewart L. Woodford, and its acceptance by Alderman Sanger, who represented Mayor Grace. The societies then sang the pilgrim chorus from Verdi's "I Lombardi," and the ceremonies closed with a commemorative address by George William Curtis. The speaker was frequently interrupted by applause. He spoke as follows:

To-day and here, we, who are children of New England, have but one thought, the Puritan, one pride and joy, the Puritan story. ...

He apprehended his own principle indeed, often blindly, often narrowly, never in its utmost amplitude and splendor. The historic Puritan was a man of the seventeenth century, not of the nineteenth. He saw through a glass darkly, but he saw. The acorn is not yet the oak, the well spring is not yet the river. But as the harvest is folded in the seed, so the largest freedom, political and religious—liberty, not toleration, not permission, not endurance—but the right of absolute individual liberty, subject only to the equal right of others, is the ripened fruit of the Puritan principle.

The history of colonial New England and of New England in the Union is the story of the influence of the Puritan in America. That is a theme too alluring to neglect, too vast to be attempted now. ...

ZACH MONTGOMERY.

The Enemy of the Public Schools Given a Berth by President Cleveland.

The President has appointed Zachariah Montgomery, of California, Assistant Attorney-General for the Interior Department, and he has done it with full knowledge of Montgomery's bitter opposition to the public schools.

The friends of the public school system, under the leadership of Justice Field, protested to the Attorney-General and to the President that to appoint Montgomery, particularly to the department which alone touches the common-school system, so far as the Federal Government has any relations with the schools, would be interpreted by the friends of the public schools as a defiance. On the other hand, it was represented that to refuse the commission to Montgomery for no other reason than that he is an advocate of education under the influence of the Catholic Church might invite the antagonism of another class, and that this other class is one in which is found a large percentage of the Democratic voters.

It was Mr. Justice Field who withdrew from the Congressional Library the only pamphlets written by Montgomery upon the school question which the library possessed, and these pamphlets, carefully marked and accompanied by verbal explanations, were presented to the President. ...

THE DAY WE LIVE IN.

Dr. Talmage on the Need of Aggressive Christianity.

Robust Spiritual Health One of the First Requirements—Unbounded Faith That Truth Will Finally Triumph and Wickedness Be Overthrown.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage recently preached in the Brooklyn Tabernacle on the subject: "The Day We Live In." The text was from Esther iv., 14: "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?" Dr. Talmage said:

ESTHER.

Esther, the beautiful, was the wife of Ahasuerus, the abominable. The time had come for her to present a petition to her infamous husband in behalf of the Jewish Nation, to whom she had once belonged. She was afraid to undertake the work, lest she should lose her own life; but her uncle, Mordecai, who had brought her up, encouraged her with the suggestion that probably she had been raised up of God for that peculiar mission. "Who knoweth whether thou art come to the Kingdom for such a time as this?" Esther had her God-appointed work; you and I have ours. It is my business to tell you what style of men and women you ought to be in order that you may meet the demand of the age in which God has cast your lot.

If you have come expecting to hear abstractions discussed or dry technicalities of religion glorified, you have come to the wrong church; but if you really would like to know what this age has a right to expect of you as Christian men and women, then I am ready in the Lord's name to look you in the face. When two armies have rushed into battle the officers of either army do not want a philosophical discussion about the chemical properties of human blood or the nature of the gunpowder; they want some one to man the batteries and swab out the guns. And now, when all the forces of light and darkness, of Heaven and hell, have plunged into the fight, it is no time to give ourselves to the definitions and formulas and technicalities and conventionalities of religion. What we want is practical, earnest, concentrated ...

... ple to come in? What would have become of you and me if Christ had not come down off the hills of Heaven and if He had not come through the door of the Bethlehem caravansary, and if He had not with the crushed hand of the crucifixion knocked at the iron gate of the sepulcher of our spiritual death, crying: "Lazarus, come forth!" O, my Christian friends, this is no time for inertia when all the forces of darkness seem to be in full blast, when steam printing-presses are publishing infidel tracts, when express railroad trains are carrying messengers of sin, when fast clippers are laden with opium and rum, when the night air of our cities is polluted with the laughter that breaks up from the ten thousand saloons of dissipation and abandonment, when the fires of the second death already are kindled in the cheeks of some who only a little while ago were incorrupt. Oh, never since the curse fell upon the earth has there been a time when it was such an awful, such a cruel, such an awful thing for the Church to sleep. The great audiences are not gathered in the Christian churches; the great audiences are gathered in temples of sin—tears of unutterable woe their baptism, the blood of cherished hearts the awful wine of their sacraments, blasphemies their litany and the groans of the lost world the organ dirge of their worship.

NOT VACILLATION, BUT GROWTH.

Again, if you want to be qualified to meet the duties which this age demands of you you must, on the one hand, avoid reckless iconoclasm, and, on the other hand, not stick too much to things because they are old. The air is full of new plans, new projects, new theories of government, new theologies, and I am amazed to see how so many Christians want only novelty in order to recommend a thing to their confidence; and so they vacillate and swing to and fro, and they are useless and they are unhappy. New plans—secular, ethical, philosophical, religious, cis-Atlantic, transatlantic—long enough to make a line reaching from the German universities to great Salt Lake City.

There was a time when men derided even Bible societies, and when a few young men met near a hay-stack in Massachusetts and organized the first missionary society ever organized in this country there went laughter and ridicule all around the Christian ...

When he prayed he reached up and seemed to take hold of the very throne of the Almighty, and he talked with God until the very heavens were bowed down into the sitting-room. Oh, if I were dying I would rather have plain Peter Cray kneel by my bed-side and commend my immortal spirit to God than the greatest Archbishop arrayed in costly canonicals. Go preach this Gospel. You say you are not licensed. In the name of the Lord Almighty this morning I license you. Go preach this Gospel—preach it in the Sabbath-schools, in the prayer-meetings, in the highways, in the hedges. Woe be unto you if you preach it not!

DARE NOT TO BECOME DISCOURAGED.

I remark again that in order to be qualified to meet your duty in this particular age you want unbounded faith in the triumph of the truth and the overthrow of wickedness. How dare the Christian Church ever get discouraged? Have we not the Lord Almighty on our side? How long did it take God to slay the hosts of Sennacherib or burn Sodom or shake down Jericho? How long will it take God, when He once arises in His strength, to overthrow all the forces of iniquity? Between this time and that there may be long seasons of darkness; the chariot-wheels of God's Gospel may seem to drag heavily; but there is the promise and yonder is the throne, and when omniscience has lost its eye-sight and omnipotence falls back impotent and Jehovah is driven from His throne, then the Church of Jesus Christ can afford to be despondent—but never until then. Despots may plan and armies may march, and the congresses of the nations may seem to think they are adjusting all the affairs of the world, but the mighty men of the earth are only the dust of the chariot-wheels of God's providence. And I think that before the sun of this century shall set the last tyranny will fall, and with a splendor of demonstration that shall be the astonishment of the universe, God will set forth the brightness and pomp and glory and perpetuity of His eternal government. Out of the starry flags and emblazoned insignia of this world, God will make a path for His own triumph, and returning from universal conquest He will sit down the grandest, strongest, highest throne of earth, His footstool.

—The East Jordan band have new uniforms.

—A Post of the G. A. R. will be organized at Elk Rapids pretty soon.

—Harbor Springs people cannot do a pleasanter thing the 4th, than come to Charlevoix

—Decorate for the Fourth and for the visit of the State Press Association the next Wednesday.

—The base-ball Tournament will be held on the Dixon grounds, just north of the Chicago club house.

—Our up-the-lake-and-Arm friends will receive a cordial welcome to Charlevoix next Saturday, the Fourth.

—See here! It is high time that the Charlevoix band were uniformed. Who will start the shekels rolling?

—Under the efficient management of Mr. George Hannah, the shipping interests of the Hannah, Lay boats are well attended to.

—The Bellaire ball club has definitely decided to go up and possess the goodly prize offered by the Charlevoix Tournament, July 4.—Herald.

—The steamers Grand Rapids and Faxton have reduced their fare for the Fourth to one dollar for the round trip from Petoskey or Charlevoix to Traverse City and return.

—Come to Charlevoix the Fourth.

—The Chicago Club House opened Saturday.

—Boyne Cityites hail the new Hello-phone with delight.

—David Preston, the prohibitionist, has a cottage at Bay View.

—The East Jordan boys are also expected to participate in the tournament Saturday.

—Mrs. L. Blanchard and her granddaughter, Miss Blanch Bartholomew, left to-day for a visit among friends in Albion.

—Jos. Watson, Detroit, the president of the Stoepel Lumber Co., at East Jordan is at that place for a few days, on business.

—The [illegible] says that the Boyne City ladies have presented their ball nine with "a new set of costumes." Probably for a masquerade.

—The business management of the late G. A. R. entertainment was most praiseworthy. Military promptness is a good thing to mix with business methods.

—After recently trying the trout fishing in the Boardman and other Northern Michigan streams, A. B. Turner, the veteran fisherman, says that the Jordan is far superior to all others for trout.

—Major and Mrs Burton left for Roscommon Sunday on the Lawrence. Mr. Burton has organized a company of his own for next season. Come this way Major and you will play to full houses.

—The hospitable home of W. P. Brown was crowded during Thursday evening by visitors who went to view the magnificent blossom on his thrifty night blooming cereus. There are 15 buds yet remaining.

—The Vanderbilt Review has passed in its checks, the plant being sold by the sheriff to Mancelona parties for $254. This venture shows the folly of attempting to start a paper where the population is so sparse.

—The pastor of the M. E. church reports a pleasant and profitable visit at East Jordan, while attending upon the duties of the presiding elder. A new church is not only needed, but will be a fact in the near future.

—The W. C. T. U., of Petoskey, are making a move toward closing up all business places on Sunday, and sermons were preached in all the churches last Sunday on the subject. The barbers have stopped shaving on that day.

—A good deal of satisfaction is expressed by the cottagers of both resorts at the thorough efficiency and vigilance that has been displayed by resort wardens Kelley and Dougherty during the past winter. Not a single case of theft has been reported.

—The Charlevoix public schools closed last Friday.

—Rev. McCartney of Banks, filled the Methodist pulpit, Sunday.

—Ironton's new hotel will be three stories, sixty two feet front, wing 24x48.

—Dave Bradbeer was about town for the first time in many months, last Thursday.

—Decorate for the Fourth and for the visit of the State Press Association the next Wednesday.

—The Good Templars will run ice cream stands at the ball grounds and on Bridge street, the Fourth.

—Leave your Fourth of July decorations up until after the visit of the State Press Association next Wednesday.

—Advance, Dwight's Landing and Rock Elm are also included in the Charlevoix county towns connected by telephone.

—At the battle of the Boyne last Wednesday the head of the lake sat down on the key to the whole Pine lake region, to the scale of 44 to 21.

—All the members of the M. E. choir are requested to be at the church next Saturday evening at 8 o'clock sharp, for the practice. Bring all the Anthem books.

—Rev. J. T. Iddings will occupy his pulpit next Sabbath morning, and deliver the temperance address under the auspices of the Womans Christian Temperance Union, at the evening service.

—Effie Johns, otherwise Mrs Robert McNair, who played here for several weeks two and three years ago, and made many personal friends in Charlevoix, died on the 18th in Chicago, of dropsy of the heart.

—The Grand Rapids & Indiana railroad company will sell Fourth of July excursion tickets to and from all stations on the line at one fare for the round trip; good going on the 3d and 4th and for return until the 6th.

—Don't use rubber stamps on your letter-heads; this is a "dead give away" on your own business, on the town and on the newspaper published in it. Get your letter heads, envelopes, business cards, etc., printed at a printing office.

—Don't be so antedeluvian as to write notices for posting purposes; get them printed. Written notices in these days of the printing press are out of place and give strangers and people from other go ahead towns the impression that there is a screw loose somewhere or that somebody is behind the times.

—One of our Missouri editors in writing up the recent trip of the Missouri excursion, alludes to Petowskey the loveliest spot on Lake Michigan," and that after having seen Mackinac Island. We are much obliged for his good opinion, but object to any such southernizing of our name as "Petowskey." It isn't pretty.—Record.

—Charlie Kemp met with quite an accident on Saturday last. He was engaged in cleaning out a cistern, and, in climbing out, he in some manner slipped and fell, striking his cranium on the hard cement wall. Assistance was summoned and he was lifted out, but it was some hours before he regained consciousness. Fortunately for Charlie, the injury did not prove serious.—Mancelona Herald.

—The Missouri editors, who were here three weeks ago, all speak very highly of their trip through Michigan. From one of them we clip the following, which echos the sentiments of the others: "We have attended every Press excursion since 1869; we have partaken of Southern hospitality, and enjoyed a Western welcome, but for genuine cordiality, generous treatment and open-hearted welcome, the Michigan people take the cake.—Petoskey Democrat.

—Beached June 7th, on South Manitou island, a curious looking craft, with a full set of canvas. The crew had evidently been lost, as the craft was water logged. It was found by the light keeper, Martin Knudsen, and proved to be a mammoth kite, curiously ornamented, and attached by a long string to a large log, which it had evidently towed from some point to the lake, as it struck the island during a heavy south gale, and had on it Frankfort, Manistee and Traverse City papers.

—July 1st many changes will be made in postmasters' salaries. These salaries are based upon the amount of business done in the respective offices, and the reduction in the rate of postage from three to two cents has seriously affected the income of many offices. Reductions in salary ranging from $100 to $500 are made in 67 offices in Michigan. The Traverse City remains as last year, $1,800. Big Rapids is reduced from $2,300 to $2,100; Cadillac from $2,000 to $1,700; Cheboygan from $1,[illegible]00 to $1,600; Evart from $1,[illegible]00 to $1,000; Petoskey from $1,800 to $1,500; Reed City from $1,600 to $1,400; St. Ignace from $1,400 to $1,00. The Kalkaska office is reduced from a presidential office to the 4th class.

—H. Lee Iddings goes to Albion to morrow.

—At Boyne yesterday—Base ball—Boyne 34—East Jordan 7.

—Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Dygert and children returned from Ionia, yesterday.

—Allen P. May, who opens the Petoskey rink to-morrow evening, was in town yesterday.

—Two Chicago men are getting out 150,000 last blocks on L. Whitmoyer's place, in Marion.

—Hannah, Lay & Co., will run the Faxton between Petoskey and Charlevoix every Sunday. A great convenience

—Prof. H. M. Enos of Cadillac, an instructor of many years experience, will have charge of the Charlevoix school next year.

—In addition to ball playing on the Dixon grounds the Fourth, there will be games on the Mason grounds, on the south terrace.

—H. Baker, of Ellenburg, N. Y., has bought the Inwood farm in Norwood township, for $3,800. The sale was made through the Upright Bros agency.

—F. J. Cutter's band of Advance will give an excursion from Boyne City, Horton's Bay, Advance, Bay Springs and Ironton to Charlevoix and Petoskey, the Fourth.

—Mrs. A. D. Otis of South Arm, was thrown from a buggy by a runaway horse on Friday, and was picked up unconscious. She was quite seriously hurt, but is doing well.

—H. A. Clover Jr., Mrs. Judge Clover Mrs. Jules Valle, child and nurse, of St. Louis, arrived yesterday, and are quartered at the Fountain City House. Jules Valle will join them Monday

—Capt. A. H. Bennett and family moved to Traverse City yesterday. The captain has secured a season's work on the asylum. We shall hope to number the captain and family as Charlevoixians again some time.

—Hon. A. R. Chapman and wife made us a pleasant call yesterday. Mr Chapman represented Hillsdale county in the late lamented legislature and was the peer of any member of that body for level headed legislation.

—Miss Flora Nelson's scholars surprised her last Friday, at the close of the year, by having Mr. Iddings present to speak for them in presenting her with some testamonials of their affectionate regard for her as their teacher.

—Grand Rapids Eagle: "The Woodruff sleeping car 'Crescent City,' which attracted so much attention at the New Orleans exposition, has been placed on the northern end of the G. R. & I. railroad. It arrived in the city yesterday and went north last night on the first trip. It is a palace on wheels. The interior finish is of mahogany and the draperies of the best.

—Editors of leading papers from all over the State have written C. S. Hampton, president of the State and secretary of the Western Michigan Press Association, signifying their intention to attend the joint meeting at Traverse City July 6th. Over fifty such letters were received Monday, and the prospects are good for a large attendance and a glorious time.—Independent.

—Here is a little fish legislation by the last session of our State Solons: "To kill fish by dynamite or other explosive, or by spearing in any of the waters of the State except the great lakes and the connecting rivers, from March to September inclusive, or to catch fish by continuous nets in any of the waters of the State except the great lakes; the catching of mullets, suckers, redsides or sturgeon during March, April and May by spearing excepted.

—A Sunday school teacher asked her scholars to each learn a verse to recite when they dropped in their pennies at the missionary meeting, appropriate for the occasion. They all came prepared the next Sunday, and the first little fellow, as he dropped in his offering, said: "Blessed is he that considereth the poor." The second repeated: "He that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord." The teacher was delighted and as the third, a very little boy, went forward she whispered in his ear: "Now speak out loudly, Johnnie!" Johnnie, reluctantly dropping his money in the box, lisped: "The fool and hith money ith thoon parted."

—Time changed on the G. R. & I. last week Sunday, and some of the changes are notable. The "Junction" has been named "Ke-go-mic." Passenger trains leave Petoskey going south, at 9.25 a. m., 2.22 p. m. and 9.47 p. m. Going north at 6.19 a. m., 2.50 p. m. and 7.47 p. m. The accommodation leaves going north at 4.15 p. m. and south 8.47 a. m. The train arriving at Petoskey going south at 9.47 p. m., runs every day in the week between Mackinaw and Petoskey, also the train north at 6.19 a. m. Thus persons can spend Sunday on Mackinac Island and return on Sunday evening. The Harbor Springs branch will run 8 trains each way on week days, and 3 trains each way on Sunday.

—Decorate—Decorate—Decorate.

—Preaching at Black's school house next Sabbath at 3 o'clock.

—The steamer Clara Belle will give an excursion from Boyne City to Charlevoix on the 4th, leaving there at [illegible] a. m. One fare for round trip

—Mike Lutney has leased twenty five feet front of the Inman lot, on Bridge street, and will erect a building this summer, for a millinery store and residence

—Mr. Nelson, of Boyne Falls, some time ago lost his house by fire, last week had his log pen, and granery, eleven hogs, and his farming utensils destroyed in the same manner.

—Charlie Plass, the ex steward of the Excelsior boat club of Detroit, is working for Joe Beauvais. Last week he built a fine 16 foot clinker for Major Green aside from making six pairs of spoon oars.

—The time of the annual Sabbath school festival in the M. E. church will be one week from to-day, July 8th. Further notice will be given. All members of the Sabbath school we request to be present next Sabbath.

—Next Wednesday the steamer Fraunt will give an excursion to East Jordan, leaving here in the morning and remaining there for dinner, thus giving three hours there. Any who like can go up in the afternoon on the Gazelle, for same rate. Mr. Dave Bradbeer has chartered the Fraunt, and has the management of the excursion.

—At eight o'clock next Wednesday morning, the Michigan State Press association will leave Traverse City upon Hannah, Lay & Co's magnificent steamer City of Traverse for an excursion down Grand Traverse bay. The forenoon will be spent upon this far famed sheet of water, and Charlevoix will be reached at noon. Here the citizens will take charge of the party and a couple of hours will be spent in viewing the town and neighboring resorts. After a banquet tendered by the Charlevoix people, the excursionists will board the steamer City of Grand Rapids, and with just a glimpse of the beauties of Pine Lake will run up Little Traverse Bay to Petoskey. Here the citizens will entertain their honored guests with a banquet and ball at the Arlington Hotel. Thursday will be spent in Petoskey, Harbor Springs, and the summer resorts which cluster about the bay, and some suitable entertainment will be provided for the evening. It is not likely that the party can be held together longer than Thursday, but numerous side excursions will be arranged for those who can remain longer.

—"We might better license a saloon and have the tax, than allow it to be sold as it is now, therefore we are in favor of license." Thus argue a few so called temperance men of our village. They hardly catch the point. This should be their argument "Too much liquor is sold here now, and instead of licensing a saloon and teaching more to become drunkards, we will use our best endeavors to crush out or at least suppress so far as possible the evil we already have." It is not the tax we want—we do not desire to have poor inebriates starve their families, mortgage their homes, in order that they may support a saloon and the saloon pays us the tax to use for township purposes. What we are after is to stop the making of drunkards and the evils that always follow in the wake of whiskey.—Breeze. Thats what we call hitting the nail squarely on the head.—Kalkaska Leader." And yet there are plenty of fools who imagine that a village makes money out of tax on whiskey selling. The drunkards wife and children, and the men engaged in legitimate business are the ones who pay the taxes in the long run, and make the saloon keepers rich to boot.—Record.

MICHIGAN LEGISLATURE.

SENATE—On the 16th the Committee on Appropriations presented a statement estimating the expenditures of 1885 at $1,000,469, and those for 1886 at $796,875. The estimated receipts for 1885 from other sources except taxation are: For 1885, [illegible]; for 1886, [illegible]. Among the bills passed were the following: Amending Act 177, of 1881, relative to delivery of grain by railway companies; granting swamp-lands near Howes and Evers Lakes in Ingham County. The bill to consolidate the laws relative to prisons and abolishing convict labor was read and discussed. Attorney-General Taggart sent a lengthy opinion on the legality of the Marine City Mutual Marriage Association, holding that it is not a legal organization, and that from its nature it must prove a snare to those who join it. A resolution directing the Attorney General to close up the affairs of the association was passed.

HOUSE—Bills were passed amending the Highway law; prohibiting the use of tobacco by pupils and teachers in and about school and on school grounds; amending Howell relative to damages for injuries caused by defective sidewalks; amending the statute relative to the punishment of libel and slander; appropriating $10,000 to place a statue of Lewis Cass in the old Hall of Representatives at Washington.

SENATE—On the 17th various nominations by the Governor were approved in executive session. Among the bills passed were the following: The General Appropriation bill; the House bill consolidating the management of State prisons and abolishing the contract system; the House bill amending the act relative to mechanic's liens; the House bills amending the Election laws and relative to the liquor tax. The Governor noted his approval of various acts passed by the Senate.

HOUSE—Bills were passed for the appointment of a Pardon Board; to compel foreign corporations doing a mining and smelting business in the State to report annually to the Auditor-General and pay a specific tax on their business. After the passage of the usual complimentary resolutions to the officers of the two houses the Legislature adjourned sine die at 10:40 p. m.

DELIGHT IN THE LORD.

Men's Mistakes in Judging and Condemning.

Many Would Forget God, While Others Dread and Dislike Him—What It Is to Delight in the Almighty.

[From a Recent Sermon by Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon.]

"For then shalt thou have thy delight in the Almighty, and shalt lift up thy face unto God."—Job 22: 26.

THE MISTAKE OF ELIPHAZ.

Eliphaz and his friends had judged Job from their own point of view, making their own experience to be the standard. They themselves had prospered, and therefore they inferred that if a man served God he must necessarily prosper in worldly things; and that if he did not succeed as they had done, he must have been guilty of great crimes. Though they could not discover any actual fault in Job, they concluded, without further evidence, that he must have been a hypocrite, and have acted oppressively to his servants, or have been unmindful of the claims of the poor, or in some other way have brought upon himself the wrath of God. It never entered their mind that so terrible a sickness and such a list of dreadful calamities could have befallen any man except as a punishment for special sin. They inferred virtue from prosperity, and sin from adversity. Unrighteous and cruel logic! At once false and brutal! It renders them at once false witnesses and Pharisees; condemning the innocent because of their sorrows, and flattering themselves because of their ease. To judge according to outward circumstances has been the tendency of men in all times; even David could not understand how it was that the wicked were so free from troubles, while all the day long he was himself plagued, and chastened [illegible]

[illegible] the burnt-offering, but they have not learned to feed upon it, and so to have happy communion with God. These people may be safe, but they are not happy: they may be saved from sin, but not from sorrow. Faith, if it were stronger, would effectually slay and bury servile fear.

WHAT IT IS TO DELIGHT IN GOD.

Let us meditate a while upon what is here meant by delighting in the Almighty. The man who experiences this delight is glad that there is a God. That atheistic philosophy which makes the whole world to be a chance production which grew of itself, or developed itself by some innate force, is a very dreary piece of fiction to the man who delights himself in the Almighty. I tremble at any teaching, religious or scientific, which seems to place God further off than we have believed Him to be. To draw Him nearer to me, and myself nearer to Him, is the innermost longing of my soul. Do you not feel the same? I know you do if you have a child-like spirit towards Him. We delight to see God in the shadow of every passing cloud, in the coloring of every opening flower, in the glitter of every dewdrop, in the twinkling of every star. The Lord is personally at work in all the processes of nature, and natural laws are simply the Lord's usual method of operation. Our God is so near us that in Him we live, and move, and have our being. Beloved, the thought of God is to the souls of those who know and love Him the most delightful that can cross the mind. To put God away from us is injury to our happiness, as well as treason to our duty; but to get nearer and clearer views of His omnipresence, His omniscience, His omnipotence, is to increase the joy of our heart.

Practically put, this delight in the Almighty shows itself in the Christian when nothing else remains to him. If he be stripped of everything, he cries: "The Lord is my portion." When the cupboard is bare, and the garments are worn out, and poverty stares the man in the face, he says: "My God is such a satisfactory and [illegible]

Fear covers her face, and would fain hide herself altogether, even though to accomplish concealment the rocks must fall upon her. That sacred bravery which the Holy Spirit breathes into the child of God makes him cry: "Abba, Father," and in the spirit of adoption he lifts up his face unto God.

May it not also signify expectation? "I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills, from whence cometh my help." "My expectation is from him," says David. Oh, to lift one's face toward God, looking for deliverance, safety and rest, and expecting both grace and glory from his right hand!

Brethren, I am talking very simply of things well known to me, and yet I can not convey to you a sense of the joy of a face uplifted unto God. You must feel it for yourselves, by lifting up your own faces. Some of you poor creatures can not lift up your faces unto God by reason of despondency; but we pray that you may yet do so. As for you who are God's own people, and yet go through the world in bondage, I charge you, cry unto the Lord to change your condition, and fill you with His joy, for then your faces will shine in the light of His face.

When you delight in the Lord, nothing can disturb the unbroken current of your joy! The sublime serenity of the heavens which arch above your head enters into your own spirit when the Lord who made the heavens dwells in your heart. Strive after this sacred peace: delight in the Almighty, and lift up your faces unto God.

A SINGULAR BOOK.

Scintillating With Sarcasm and Brilliant With Truth.

[New York Correspondence American Rural Home.]

Chap. I. "Has Malaria," goes to Florida.

Chap. II. "Overworked," goes to Europe.

Chap. III. "Has Rheumatism," goes to Ems.

Chap. IV. Has a row with his Doctor!

The above chapters, Mr. Editor, I find in a book recently published by an anonymous author. I have read a deal of sarcasm in my day, but I never read anything equal to the sarcasm herein contained. I suspect the experience portrayed is a personal one; in short, the author intimates as much on page 31. Let me give you a synopsis:

"Malaria," as it states, is the cloak with which superficial physicians cover up a multitude of ill feelings which they do not understand, and do not much care to investigate. It is also a cover for such diseases as they cannot cure. When they advise their patient to travel or that he has overworked and needs rest and is probably suffering from malaria, it is a confession of ignorance or of inability. The patient goes abroad. The change is a tonic and for a time he feels better. Comes home. Fickle appetite, frequent headaches, severe colds, cramps, sleeplessness, irritability, tired feelings, and general unfitness for business are succeeded in due time by alarming attacks of rheumatism which flit about his body regardless of all human feeling.

It is muscular,—in his back. Articular,—in his joints. Inflammatory, my! how he fears it will fly to his heart! Now off he goes to the springs. The doctor sends him there, of course, to get well; at the same time he does not really want him to die on his hands!

That would hurt his business!

Better for a few days. Returns. After a while neuralgia transfixes him. He bloats; can not breathe; has pneumonia; can not walk; can not sleep on his left side; is fretful; very nervous and irritable; is pale and flabby; has frequent chills and fevers; everything about him seems to go wrong; becomes suspicious; musters up strength and demands to know what is killing him!

"Great heaven!" he cries, "why have you kept me so long in ignorance?"

"Because," said the doctor, "I read your fate five years ago. I thought best to keep you comfortable and ignorant of the facts."

He dismisses the doctor, but too late! His fortune has all gone to fees.

But him, what becomes of him?

The other day a well-known Wall street banker said to me "It is really astonishing how general bright's disease is becoming. Two of my personal friends are now dying of it. But it is not incurable I am certain, for my nephew was recently cured when his physicians said recovery was impossible. The case seems to me to be a wonderful one." This gentleman formerly represented his government in a foreign country. He knows, appreciates and declares the value of that preparation, because his nephew, who is a son of Danish Vice-Consul Schmidt, was pronounced incurable when the remedy, Warner's safe cure, was begun. "Yes," said his father, "I was very skeptical, but since taking that remedy the boy is well."

I regret to note that ex-President Arthur is said to be a victim of this terrible disease. He ought to live, but the probabilities are that since authorized remedies can not cure him, his physicians will not advise him to save his life, as so many thousands have done, by the use of Warner's safe cure, which Gen. Christiansen, of Drexel, Morgan & Co.'s, told me he regarded "as a wonderful remedy."

Well, I suspect the hero of the book cured himself by the same means. The internal evidence points very strongly to this conclusion.

I can not close my notice of this book better than by quoting his advice to his readers:

"If, my friend, you have such an experience as I have portrayed, do not put your trust in physicians to the exclusion of other remedial agencies. They have no monopoly over disease and I personally know that many of them are so very 'conscientious' that they would far prefer that their patients should go to Heaven direct from their powerless hands than that they should be saved to earth by the use of any 'unauthorized' means."

And that the author's condemnation is too true, how many thousands duped, and yet rescued, as he was, can personally testify?

It takes a good many strikes to make a base-ball match go off well.—Oil City Derrick.

"All Men Are Liars,"

said David of old. He was probably prompted to make the above remark after trying some unreliable catarrh remedy. Had he been permitted to live until the present day, and tried Dr. Sage's Remedy, he might have had a better opinion of mankind. We claim that no case of catarrh can withstand the magic effects of this wonderful medicine. One trial of it will convince you of its efficacy. By druggists; fifty cents.

CANCER of the TONGUE.

A Case Resembling That of General Grant.

Some ten years ago I had a scrofulous sore on my right hand, and with the old-time treatment it healed [illegible] March, 1882, it broke out in my throat, and concentrated in cancer, eating through my cheek, to the top of my left cheek bone and up to the left eye. I subsisted on liquids, and my tongue was so far gone I could not talk. On October last, 1884, I commenced taking Swift's Specific. In a month the eating places stopped and healing commenced, and the fearful aperture in my cheek has been closed and firmly knitted together. A new under lip is progressing, and it seems that nature is supplying a new tongue. I can talk so that my friends can readily understand me and can also eat solid food again. I would refer to Hon. John H. Traylor, State Senator, of this district, and to Dr. T. S. Bradfield, of Lagrange, Ga. MRS. MARY L. COMER.

TO A FRIEND who is suffering from Boils and Carbuncles, no better advice can be given than to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

ORLANDO SNELL, 132 [illegible] st., Lowell, Mass., was terribly afflicted with Carbuncles on the back of his neck. Ayer's Sarsaparilla cured the Carbuncles, and has kept him free from them.

F. P. COGGESHALL, Bookseller, Lowell, says: I have been taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla for an impurity of the blood, which manifests itself in troublesome Boils and Eruptions, and can truly say that I have never found any medicine so prompt and certain in curative effect. It has done me great good.

LEANDER J. McDONALD, Soley St., Charlestown, Mass., testifies: One year ago I suffered greatly from Boils and Carbuncles, and for nearly two months was unable to work. A druggist advised me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which I purchased. After taking two bottles of this [illegible]

A Graphic Account of Its Wonders in Animal and Vegetable Life.

[illegible] strongly with the apparently lifeless tree. The mistletoe is not an airy plant. It lives on a live tree and fastens its roots firmly into the branch to which it is attached, so the further end of the limb often dies. It seems to be especially fond of the oak, and is never seen on the cypress or pine, though they may be near by. I think I have seen it on other trees beside the oak, but could not distinguish what they were in the distance. But as we sweep around some new point we are again brought back to admire the richness of the coloring. Here are the heavy, dark colors—the gray hanging moss and dark trunks. Here the eye passes on to lighter and gayer colors. Through sun green and bronze leaves the crimson flower of the maple and white bloom of the wild plum are seen, and one hardly knows which to choose, the North with the fresh and variegated green and flowers of Spring, or the South with its deep and rich Autumnal tints. Here the contrast of colors in the Fall is not so striking, but spring, with its fresh and early life, is certainly beautiful. Perhaps one insensibly contrasts it with snows and the dead wintry branches to which at this season of the year he has been accustomed.

Some may ask about animal life. A large number of tourists seem to act as if their chief object in coming to Florida was to see a live alligator. Warm days alligators can often be seen sunning themselves on a log, but, as the waves from the boat reach them, off they slide into the water. A cool day you may pass up and down the rivers and not discover one. There is a great scarcity of birds this Winter. A Winter or two ago we could see hundreds of ducks on the lake. This year there there are but a few, and as Spring approaches even they disappear. There are some herons here. Once in a while we see a white heron, but it is to be feared hunters will kill them off, as they have the paroquet. Occasionally we see a water turkey. It bears no resemblance to the domestic turkey, except that it is good to eat. It is not large, and is of a dull plumage. It sits like a cormorant on a log or tree bending over the water, and at sight of fish it dives, and often comes up a long distance from its diving-place.

Going Too Far.

What a Demoralized Dude Did.

Grant's Cigar.

[illegible] I came back to New York, and found a note from the general asking me to come and see him at Long Branch. I went down with John F. Henry. As we were talking, Gen. Grant took out his cigar case and offered us cigars, taking and lighting one himself. I took one, excused myself from smoking at the time, and stuck it in the breast pocket of my coat. Well, I became better acquainted with that cigar than I ever did with any other, for I carried it in that breast-pocket for a year and took it out every day—probably several times every day—and looked at it and smelt it and rolled it in my fingers and slily nibbled the end. But I never consumed it." And Mr. Weed transferred to the chair-back the pet pigeon he was fondling at the time, rose painfully from his seat, went across the room, and took from a drawer and handed to me a tough-looking cigar with both ends somewhat masticated. "That's it," he added; "I never smoked it, and now I don't want it."

THE shower of white dust which caused such a sensation some three weeks ago in the vicinity of Wheeling, W. Va., was repeated a few days ago, the fall being observed in all parts of the city and surrounding country. No one could offer a plausible theory as to its origin or nature.

FLORIDA'S fame as a land to make fortunes in has reached London, and a colony of fifty families of fruit-growers and market-gardeners are preparing to immigrate to St. Lucie in November. It is expected that their skill and knowledge of horticulture will insure them great success.

A LETTER from England states that the real name of Maxwell, who killed Preller in the Southern Hotel at St. Louis, is H. M. Brooks; that his father is a schoolmaster, and that after forging the latter's name he left for America, taking with him several articles belonging to other persons.

DR. E. S. JANES, of the New York Board of Health, says: "New York was never better prepared against an epidemic than it is now. Our streets are clean, the sanitary condition of the city is excellent, and every preparation has been made to keep off cholera and stamp it out if it should get past quarantine."

SOME children playing with matches recently in the Hungarian village of Nemedi caused a disastrous fire, which destroyed 232 houses. Nothing remains of the village except the church and a few cottages in its neighborhood. The whole population has been ruined, for only a few of the people were insured, and these but partially.

THE largest catch of salmon in the Penobscot River yet reported to have been made in one weir in any single day was made recently in a large weir just below Fort Point. Thirty-three large salmon were taken from it which weighed a little over four hundred pounds. The day's work was worth more than one hundred dollars to the owner of the weir.

A YOUNG Scotchman, whose father has made large investments in farming lands in this country, has hired himself out to an Illinois farmer at the rate of fifteen dollars a month for the purpose of learning the American methods of farming. He expects to devote two years to this object and then take charge of one of his father's farms, consisting of 100,000 acres, in Southwest Missouri.

REBECCA NOURSE was hanged as a witch at Salem, Mass., in July, 1692, and was buried at Danvers. Upon her conviction she said: "I am innocent, and God will clear my innocency." It has been left until this year for a monument to be erected over her grave, in memory of her virtues and her Christian character. It will be unvailed July 20, 1885, at the third annual reunion of her descendants, at the old homestead at Danvers.

JOHN McCORMICK, a poor miner, wooed a pretty lass of Clearfield County, Pa. Her guardian frowned on the suit, and McCormick left for the Colorado mines, where he remained several years. The other day he arrived in Clearfield County a wealthy man. His sweetheart was waiting for him, and is now his wife. McCormick is a handsome Scotchman, and is said to be of noble birth. He has gone to Europe with his bride.

JOHN BIGNELL, late chief of the Government exploring expedition to Lake Mistassini, the great inland sea of Northwestern Canada, reports that the facts concerning the big lake have been in no way exaggerated. Some of the islands in this huge sheet of water are over ten miles in length. Little Mistassini, instead of being a mere arm of Great Mistassini, as has been supposed, is in reality a distinct sheet of water, one hundred miles long by eight wide.

A ROYAL WELCOME.

Formal Reception of Bartholdi's Statue of Liberty.

A Naval Demonstration, the Like of Which Has Never Before Been Witnessed on American Waters—A Great Parade on Broadway.

LIBERTY'S EMBLEM.

NEW YORK, June 20.—The grandest aquatic spectacle ever witnessed in this country was presented in New York Bay yesterday forenoon when the American Statue Committee, supplemented by many thousands of enthusiastic New Yorkers, formally received the French war vessel Isere and her precious burden, Bartholdi's masterpiece. Never was a day in June fairer. Early in the morning a slight haze hung over the bay, but it was speedily dispelled by the sun and a gentle southeast breeze.

Lying off Bedloe's Island was the grim old war-ship Minnesota. Round the Narrows, anchored in the mud of Gravesend Bay, lay the long, low, white hull of the Isere, burdened plump to the water-line by the statue. The Omaha, the Dispatch, the old side wheeler Powhatan, and the dainty revenue-cutter Nellie Grant were anchored off Governor's Island, all decorated in a marvelous manner. Flags were flying from the forts lining the harbor, while the merchantmen in port made the best display possible with the bunting at hand.

Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World.

At nine o'clock the upper bay presented a brilliantly festive appearance. It was 9:30 when the Atlantic, which carried the deputation of the Chamber of Commerce and the city officials, got off. She was followed by a flotilla of tugs, barges, steamers, ferryboats and yachts. Most of these vessels had a band of music or a drum corps on board. When it is said that there were in all ninety vessels in the welcoming fleet it will be understood that there were at least fifteen thousand people afloat in this extraordinary spectacle. The testimony of French and American naval officers is unanimous that it exceeded in its imposing beauty and animation anything they had ever seen.

The procession as it came up the bay, stretching over miles of water, was witnessed from the shores of Long Island, of Governor's Island (where General Hancock and a brilliant array of officers and ladies were stationed), and of Staten Island by thousands of people. The two episodes in the escorting sail up the bay were reached in passing the Narrows and on arriving at Bedloe's Island. The salutes from the heavy guns of Forts Hamilton and Wadsworth were answered by La Flore, the French frigate, and later by the Powhatan and the Dispatch. Along the line, seen anywhere at this time from any point of view, the scene was a memorable one. The great steamers, black with human beings, blossomed suddenly into white as the myriad handkerchiefs fluttered in the breeze. Cheer after cheer came from every vessel, and as the noise of the salutes ceased there was heard the strains of the "Marseillaise" at every point of the compass.

On arriving at Bedloe's Island, where had assembled for the ceremonies at least five thousand people, the scene on the water grew even more animated as the long line broke up. Each vessel, as it passed the Isere, contributed its share of welcome in salutes, in cheers, and in the music of the "Marseillaise." As a fitting crisis all blew the steam-whistle until the whole fleet gave forth screams and ear-piercing jubilation which threatened to deafen the twenty-five thousand souls who could not get away from it.

The commander of the Isere had looked for a formal and quiet official reception, he encountered a popular outburst that amazed and delighted him. The crews of the French vessels were wild with delight. As the bands on saluting steamers struck up the "Marseillaise" the sailors waved their turbans, shouted, danced, and clasped each other, many of them with tears streaming down their bronzed faces.

Finally the Isere was escorted to her unloading station at Bedloe's Island. Every steam vessel in the flotilla rounded her with a parting salute, and then sped to the city docks. The steamer Atlantic arrived and was made fast. The first man to cross the gang-plank was Senator William M. Evarts, Chairman of the American committee. Mayor Grace and a large number of city officials and officers of the New York exchanges followed, passing through the double file of bowing and smiling sailors.

The signal gun sounded and the procession began. A stop was made opposite Fort Hamilton, when the New Yorkers transferred Captain DeSaune and staff to a launch, on which Rear Admiral Lacombe and his staff of the La Flora were already placed. Then the party called on Secretary Whitney and his brilliant corps of American naval officers on board the Dispatch, afterward making a short call at Bedloe's Island, where they were received by numerous French societies, and introduced by French Consul Brunwaert, of Chicago.

Meanwhile a crowd of people, estimated by the police at one hundred thousand, had assembled on Broadway, from the City Hall to the Battery—three-fourths of a mile of solid humanity—waiting for the land demonstration. Such another vast gathering has not been seen in this city since the funeral of Lincoln. All the off platoons of Metropolitan and park police were assigned to Broadway and the Battery, but the crowd was too much for them, and frequently took things in its own hands. From the sea-wall of the Battery away to Bowling Green the people were densely packed.

At 2:30 the party landed. Carriages swarmed about the barge-office and were quickly filled with the following distinguished company: The first was occupied by Mayor Grace, Admiral La Combe, of the French Navy, Brigadier-General Shaler and a staff officer of the First Division N. G. S. Y., and the second by President Sanger, Commander Lespinasse de Saune, of the Isere, Senator-elect William M. Evarts, Chairman of the American Statue Committee, and Commissaire-General Deltombe, of the Laflore. On either side of these was posted a guard of honor the Grenadiers Rochambeau on the right, the Garde Lafayette on the left. Preceding them were the staff officers of the Grenadiers Rochambeau, Colonel Chalfant commanding, and flanking them were the standard-bearers of that command. The other carriages formed in double order. They contained First Lieutenant Auet and Surgeon Amiand, of the Isere, besides minor officers of the vessel; Lieutenant Arajo, Lieutenant de St. Parre, Paymaster Le Caner, and Midshipmen Senis, Carrole and Guerin, of the Laflore; Edmund Brunwaert, Acting French Consul-General at New York; M. Dansseing, Chancellor of the Consulate; General Charles P. Stone, engineer-in-chief of the statue. A delegation of the American committee on the statue, representatives of the Chamber of Commerce and members of the Board of Aldermen filled thirty-two other carriages.

At 2:45 o'clock the grand parade started, led by Police Superintendent Murray, commanding a platoon of mounted police. Tremendous cheering greeted the line as it passed slowly up Broadway. The City Hall was finally reached, and there the French officers left the carriages and from the historic balcony of the Governor's room reviewed the parade. The parade over, the French officers were escorted to the palatial Aldermanic chamber, where the French singing societies had preceded them, and where they were greeted with the "Marseillaise." As they passed under the flag-decked arcade every Frenchman placed his hand on his heart and reverently bowed his head as the beloved music caused the blood to tingle in his veins. Many distinguished soldiers, statesmen, judges and lawyers welcomed the guests. Mayor Grace delivered the address of welcome, and President of the Council Sanger followed in behalf of the Aldermen with an eloquent speech. With music the programme was concluded.

The party was then entertained at luncheon in the Governor's room, after which the guests were driven in carriages to the barge office about five o'clock, and returned.

It will probably be a year before the statue will be ready for unveiling. Upon its completion the statue will be of a bright, gold-like color, such as that of a new penny. The metal is pure copper, and not bronze, so that it will have a strong reddish, instead of a yellowish, tinge. The elements will, however, in a year or two, cause the statue to take on its permanent color—a dark reddish brown.

A MODERN BORGIA.

A Story Too Horrible for Belief Told by a Female Inmate of the Jail in Chicago —She Confesses to the Poisoning of Her Father, Mother and a Sister in Dubuque, Ia.—Also to the Attempted Poisoning of Her Sister's Family—Little Faith Placed in Her Story—Undoubtedly Insane.

CHICAGO, June 20.—Mary Kleman, the girl confined in jail who has heretofore persistently asserted her innocence of the crime with which she is charged, that of administering poison to the family of Mrs. Michael Freres, her sister, with whom she has made her home for a short time, at Rose Hill, confessed last night that she was guilty, not only of the attempt upon their lives, but of causing the deaths of her mother, father and another sister in Dubuque, Ia. Her mother died in July of last year, her sister Lena in August and her father Michael in March of this year. She assigns no motive for her crimes other than that she was impelled to commit them and is evidently insane.

Mary Kleman is less than twenty-three years old, slender, rather pretty, prepossessing in manner, and an invalid, having but partial use of her lower limbs and feet. She has an innocent expression, and looks even more youthful than she is. Her eyes have the strange, bright, fixed look so often seen with a diseased mind. For the past two months she has lived with her sister at Rose Hill, to whom she came after the burial of her father in Dubuque.

Several times since she has lived with her sister she has prepared the meals, and on nearly every occasion when she has done so the family, consisting of Michael Freres, his wife and two small children, have been taken ill with vomiting immediately afterward. Michael Freres found a package of greyish-colored powder in the yard a week ago last Tuesday morning. When he ate his soup at noon he was seized with vomiting and observed a sediment in his soup-plate corresponding to it in appearance. Upon further examination more of the same substance was found in his wife's and the children's plates. He carried both the powder found in the yard and that in the plates to Evanston for analysis, and called in a physician to attend to the family. The result showed that the powder was poison. Mary Kleman was accordingly arrested, and after a preliminary hearing before Justice Chapman in Evanston, brought here and lodged in the Cook County Jail.

There is little doubt that the girl is insane. There has always been a disposition on the part of the jail officials and attendants to believe the girl guilty, the facts were so strong against her, but many of those about the jail last evening thought the alleged confession went for but little. The girl is weakly, sick and predisposed to hysterics, and if she is insane, as her relatives believe, she was even more irrational than usual last evening. Therefore not much reliance can be placed on the confession, which was simply a verbal one made in a rambling, incoherent manner.

A FRIGHTFUL FALL.

An Aeronaut in West Virginia Whirls from His Burning Balloon Several Hundred Feet, and Receives Fatal Injuries.

CHARLESTON, W. VA., June 20.—Among the attractions announced for Richard's Circus here yesterday was a free balloon ascension, and hundreds of people gathered on the grounds in the afternoon to witness the aerial flight. The aeronaut was William Patterson, aged twenty-two, of Wellesville, O., who had been with the show but three weeks, and who had never before made an ascension. At two o'clock a large canvass balloon was inflated with hot air, and Patterson took his seat in the basket. The ropes were cut and the balloon started, but had not gone ten feet when flames were observed bursting from the canvas above his head. The accident occurred through the overturning of a hot-air stove used in inflating the balloon. The burning balloon shot up into the air at a very rapid rate. When a short distance up the crowd yelled: "Jump," but Patterson did not heed the advice, and after going several hundred feet up the balloon collapsed and he fell to the earth and was crushed into a shapeless mass. Those who witnessed the affair describe it as horrifying in the extreme. Patterson's body turned over a number of times before reaching the ground. His back, legs and arms were broken, while fatal internal injuries were sustained.

It Was the Cat.

PITTSBURGH, PA., June 20.—Thomas O'Day, aged forty-eight, was shot and killed by his son John, aged twenty-one, last evening. John had been drinking heavily, and, returning home with a shotgun, killed the family cat. His father reprimanded him, when he picked up the gun and shot him in the abdomen. Death was almost instantaneous. John was arrested and lodged in jail. When he realized what he had done he tried to commit suicide, but was frustrated by his brother.

No Boomers in Oklahoma.

WASHINGTON, June 20.—The War Department has received a telegram from Captain Bennett, of the Ninth Cavalry, at Fort Reno, Indian Territory, stating that Lieutenant Stevens, of the Ninth Cavalry, has returned from Oklahoma, after having thoroughly scouted the country. No boomers were found in Oklahoma.

NATIONAL ENCAMPMENT G. A. R.

Many Thousand Veterans Arrive at Portland, Me.—Indignation Over a Circular Issued by the Law and Order League.

PORTLAND, ME., June 23.—The nineteenth annual National encampment of the Grand Army of the Republic began with the sunrise-gun yesterday morning. It bids fair to be the greatest affair of the kind in the history of that organization, and it seems that it will be altogether too big an affair for the people of Portland to handle with anything like satisfaction to the vast number of visitors or to the citizens themselves. As it is now, all of the available tents have been pitched, and those members of the Grand Army who have already arrived have been assigned to quarters. Veterans and sight-seers are arriving here on trains and boats from all directions and in great numbers. The Grand Trunk Railway has already sold upwards of seventeen thousand tickets to Portland to witness the encampment.

At Camp U. S. Grant there was a steady throng of strangers all day. For a time the rain sent the men to their tents, but it continued only for a short time. All seem satisfied with the camp, and the best of order prevails. Not a single man was noticed in camp or about it who seemed to be under the influence of liquor, and not an arrest was made in the entire city yesterday. The noon trains brought a large number of G. A. R. boys, who promptly reported to General Beal and went into camp. Maine will have about 5,000 men in camp. Men will arrive from other States and be assigned quarters as they report. From Vermont, 800 men; Indiana, 100; Kansas, 50; Pennsylvania, 800; Ohio, 200; New York, 500; Connecticut, 100; New Jersey, 300; Virginia, 250, California, 30; Petersburg, 25; Maryland, 60; Nebraska, 200; Michigan, 200; Rhode Island, 500; Colorado, 20; Minnesota, 1,000; Delaware, 25; Missouri, 20; Oregon, 10; Arkansas, 10; Kentucky, 10. Washington Territory, West Virginia, Dakota, Florida and Utah have delegations on the way. From all information received it is expected that not less than 12,000 men will be in camp and several thousand more quartered elsewhere.

A great deal is heard in regard to the liquor question, the Law and Order League having issued circulars declaring that all liquors consigned to members of the Grand Army will be promptly seized. Many of the visitors have declared their intention to vigorously oppose any such action, and last night the following was issued, signed by the departments of Ohio, Tennessee, Georgia, Illinois, Wisconsin, Kansas, Iowa, Colorado, Minnesota, Oregon, Dakota, Missouri, Nebraska and Michigan:

"NEWPORT, VT., June 22.—Two thousand comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic have read the dispatches regarding the appointment of special police to care for the lives and property of the people of Portland. We call your attention to the fact that in times past we were the police of the Nation, and twenty years has not diminished our respect for law and order. We come unarmed, and on a peaceful mission, as your guests, and respectfully ask permission to enter your city unmolested by special police or special investigating committees."

General Logan and a delegation of the Grand Army from Washington arrived from Boston last evening. Much enthusiasm was created by the reception tendered General Logan on the dock. Mrs. Logan, who accompanied the General, came in for her share of warm greetings.

DESTRUCTIVE CYCLONES.

An Ohio Village Badly Damaged by a Wind-Storm—The Tornado in Missouri.

RAVENNA, O., June 23.—The most devastating whirlwind ever seen in this part of the State passed over Ravenna at about 7:30 o'clock Sunday evening. Much rain had fallen since four p. m. Nothing unusual was observed in the atmosphere till seven o'clock, when contrary currents of wind were seen, one from the southeast, the other from the northwest. They met over the central portion of the town, causing a hissing sound. Immediately a white perpendicular line was observed, rivaling in brilliancy an aurora borealis, and carrying in its wake every movable object within a radius of a quarter of a mile. A driving rain accompanied the tornado. The almost total darkness that hung overhead like a pall during the one minute the whirlwind raged made the scene extremely weird.

The Ætna House block was denuded of its twenty immense chimneys. The heavy slate roof was next lifted, and, in falling, struck out of plumb, scattering plaster and debris through the hotel and badly scaring the inmates. The Marvin and Beebes blocks were unroofed. The Second National Bank building, a three-story brick, was rent out of shape. Reed's Hall, occupied by the salvation army, was demolished. The opera house suffered with the rest. Its dome was carried into the next block. More than one hundred buildings were badly damaged, and smaller buildings were completely wrecked. The loss will be about $100,000. A traveling man named Clark, from Chicago, was injured in the Ætna House.

ST. LOUIS, MO., June 23.—The tornado in Missouri Saturday night swept across the center of the State from Kansas City to Louisiana. At Glasgow the losses are computed at $50,000. The new Glasgow hotel was unroofed and partly demolished, and the mangled body of R. C. Wilson, of Alton, Ill., who was sleeping on the third floor, found among the debris. Many persons were injured. Much damage was done by the storm at Lexington, Fayette, Chillicothe and Louisiana.

The New British Cabinet.

LONDON, June 23.—The following is an authentic list of the new Cabinet:

Prime Minister and Secretary for Foreign Affairs—The Marquis of Salisbury.
First Lord of the Treasury—Sir Stafford Northcote.
Chancellor of the Exchequer—Sir Michael E. Hicks-Beach.

Secretary for the Home Department—Sir Richard Assheton Cross.
Secretary for the Colonial Department—Colonel Frederick Stanley.
Secretary for War—Rt. Hon. William Henry Smith.
Secretary of State for India—Lord Randolph Churchill.
First Lord of the Admiralty—Lord George Hamilton.
President of the Local Government Board—Arthur James Balfour.
President of the Board of Trade—Duke of Richmond and Gordon.
Vice-President of the Council—Hon. Edward Stanhope.
Lord Lieutenant of Ireland—Earl of Carnarvan.
Lord Chancellor of Ireland—Rt. Hon. Edward Gibson.

—It has been very truly said that when an editor makes a mistake in his paper, all the world sees and calls him a fool. When a private citizen makes a mistake, nobody knows it except a few friends, and they come around and ask the editor to keep it out of the paper. When a private citizen dies the editor is asked to write of his good qualities and leave the bad out. When the editor dies, the private citizen says: "Now that darn liar will get his deserts."—Connecticut Catholic.

—A man named Bowen died in Brooklyn thirty-two years ago, leaving an estate valued at $1,500,000, to be divided between three heirs by two trustees. It has been in the courts ever since, and now all of the heirs, two of the lawyers and one of the trustees are dead, the surviving trustee being more than ninety years of age. An English Chancery Court could hardly have done better.—N. Y. Sun.

—A ledge of white stone, which somewhat resembles marble, and is susceptible of a high polish, exists in Paradise Valley, Nevada. When quarried, it is said to be much lighter and softer than ordinary rock, but hardens upon exposure.

GEN. GRANT AGAIN AT WORK.

He Dictates a Newspaper Column of Matter—His Improved Condition.

MOUNT MACGREGOR, N. Y., June 24.—During the week which General Grant has spent here he has materially improved. Dr. Douglas said yesterday morning:

General Grant could not have lived in New York until this time with weather such as when we left. He was sinking very rapidly there. In making a comparison of the General's condition of a week ago and now there is a central fact that must always be considered—a fact that pains me deeply and all the time—and that is that we must stand by and watch the course of this illness with the consciousness of being unable to stay it. Starting from that fact, the incidents of daily change may be noted. You ask me if General Grant coughs as much now as then. I can not tell definitely. Sometimes in taking food he coughs, and it might be thought it was from other causes. Is he stronger? To that I would say that he might this morning walk back and forth on the piazza with less fatigue than would have resulted one week ago. The air is cool and the change has benefited him greatly, making him more comfortable the past week than he would have been without the change. The local conditions, the area of exterior swelling, is certainly less than when he reached here last Tuesday, and the affected parts inside are no worse. I can not say that his spirits or courage are less than a week ago. In short, the General has benefited as much as could have been expected by any change, and to-day he is stronger than when he came here.

The night was a cold one on the mountain. At six o'clock yesterday morning the mercury marked forty-four degrees. When the General awoke he said, in a voice quite clear: "I have had a good night. I slept well and feel rested."

In the afternoon the General dictated for some time in a whisper to a stenographer. After sleeping half an hour he said, in reply to a question by Dr. Douglas, that his throat did not feel tired as a result and that he did not believe the dictation had hurt him. He then spent some time in writing, and after that sat before the log-fire in the cottage. While there Dr. Douglas came in and made some remark about the work he had done. The General produced his little conversation pad, which he handed the physician after having written on it as follows: "I have now dictated and written out all the notes I had prepared, and now I shall not have that on my mind any more." When the family sat down to dinner the General again went to his room, and when Dr. Douglas left the cottage at six o'clock to go to his dinner at the hotel the General was again sleeping. The doctor said he thought the General's sleep after his dictation, and again after his writing, would balance the exertion made in dictating. The doctor did not apprehend a reaction during the night. The doctor indorsed an expressed opinion that General Grant has accomplished more than upon any one day during an extended period, and that the work was such as he could not have done on any day of the last week he spent in New York. The result of the dictation and writing was nearly a column in an ordinary newspaper.

The General spent the evening quietly with the family in the parlor by the fire-place. At 10:30 o'clock Dr. Douglas left him prepared for sleep. The doctor said: "Despite the use of his throat in dictation, the swelling on the outside is to-night less than at any time since the General came here. The swelling is decidedly decreased."

LOWER RATES OF POSTAGE.

Provisions of the New Law to Go Into Effect on the First of Next Week.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—On the first of July the changes in the rate of letter postage authorized by the Appropriation bill of the last Congress will go into operation. The effect of this will be to increase the standard weight of domestic first-class matter from half an ounce to an ounce, so that on and after the 1st of July all domestic first-class matter sent through the mails, including drop letters at letter carrier offices, must be charged with postage at the rate of two cents per ounce or fraction of an ounce, instead of two cents per half ounce or fraction, as at present, drop letters at other than letter carrier offices to be charged at the rate of one cent per ounce or fraction. This change in the standard weight will also apply to first-class matter addressed to Canada, but not to matter addressed to other foreign countries. The same law also reduces the rate of postage from two cents per pound to one cent per pound on all newspapers and periodicals when sent by the publisher and from the office of publication, including sample copies, or when sent from a news agency to actual subscribers or other news agents. Private individuals mailing newspapers and periodicals pay at the rate of one cent for four ounces. The revenue derived from the postage on newspapers and periodicals last year was nearly $2,000,000, and this reduction in rate, it is thought, will reduce the revenue from that source nearly $1,000,000. The change in the rate or weight of first-class matter, it is thought, will result in but a slight reduction in revenue from letter postage.

The Grand Army Procession.

PORTLAND, ME., June 24.—The procession started precisely at three o'clock yesterday afternoon amid the booming of guns and the plaudits of a great multitude of people who lined the route. There were thirty thousand men in line and they were three hours in passing. General Logan rode with Commander-in-Chief Kountz, and his reception by the people was the great feature of the day. It was a continuous ovation, to which he courteously responded by baring his head and bowing his acknowledgment. Governor Robie and staff, General J. C. Black, General H. W. Slocum, ex-Governor Fairchild, of Wisconsin; Governor Alger, of Michigan, and many other distinguished guests reviewed the procession from the grand stand.

A reception was tendered the visiting soldiers last night, at which patriotic addresses were delivered by Generals Logan, Slocum, Kountz and others. Though the Prohibitory law has been practically suspended during the week, there has been very little disorder.

Falling Off in Revenue Receipts.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—The fiscal year ends June 30, and according to the receipts from internal revenue, customs and miscellaneous sources, the falling off in the estimates for the year will be about $10,000,000 —$2,000,000 in the internal, $4,000,000 in customs and $4,000,000 in the miscellaneous. The expenditures have been greater for pensions and deficiencies than was anticipated, so that the surplus for the fiscal year will probably be between $15,000,000 and $20,000,000 less than was calculated by Secretary McCulloch in his report to Congress last year, leaving the surplus $30,000,000 instead of $50,000,000.

To Open Up Oklahoma.

WASHINGTON, June 24.—Senators Plumb, of Kansas, and Vest, of Missouri, have had an extended conference with the President respecting the appointment of a commissioner under the recent act of Congress providing for the extinguishment of the Indian title to the Oklahoma lands. The particular point made by these gentlemen with the President was that he should select Western men for members of this commission, persons of high character who understand the subject, and who would not fail in their mission to bring about the necessary negotiations whereby the Oklahoma territory could be opened to settlement.

Decorate.

In view of the fact that the Fourth of July only comes once a year and that the [illegible] editors of the Michigan Press Association only visit Charlevoix once in a decade, it behooves every business man and private citizen to do themselves proud in the way of decorations, on those days.

Norwood Notes.

George N. VanPelt has gone to Chicago.

The much needed rain has come at last; though little in quantity it has improved matters very much.

Walter Monty has gone west to seek his fortune, and John Bugby and Henry Brown will follow suit this week.

Henry Baker of Clinton county, N. Y., has been in town for a few days, and will locate in this vicinity if he can find a place to suit.

Mrs. Julia Moore has gone to New York to visit friends and will be absent during the summer.

Henry Wagoner has become the happy father of a bouncing baby girl the past week.

About 20 sturgeon have been caught the past week near the mouth of Whiskey creek, one of them weighing 100 lbs.

Guyles & Nash have their logs all sawed and are now planing lumber, and making shingles.

Jose and [illegible] Meech, also the wife of Robert Meech of Vermont are expected to arrive on Tuesday.

Charles Webster has gone to East Jordan, and rumor says the trip this time will end in matrimony. "So mote it be."

Last year weddings were all the rage; this year babies are in order. On Friday morning last a little blue eyed baby girl arrived in town and took up her residence with [illegible] and Belle Harris. This makes the Register of Deeds grandfather, and Psyche Ann—well, grandmother—too.

Mr. Alex. [illegible] while erecting a scaffold for the purpose of shingling his barn, last Monday, fell, and was severely injured. He is improving under the care of Dr. Preston.

On the north end of G. O. Scott's farm are more than a hundred Mound-builder's cach[illegible]. They are arranged in a semicircular form, three in a row, and extend fifty or sixty rods.

Rev. B. H. Whitman chairman of the board of school inspectors is visiting the schools, and is well pleased with the work being done in them.

The crops are beginning to suffer for want of rain. We never saw a more pressing need for it in this country.

Mr. Cook of Charlevoix, "Our tin peddler" had a break down last Thursday while coming from Petoskey loaded with rags. He borrowed a wagon and went on his way rejoicing.

Frank Burnett has purchased the Kittag[illegible] 40, of O. T. Booth, and is making arrangements to have it cleared up immediately.

In 1765 the Methodist church only had 60 chapels and 100 ministers; now it has 19,000 churches and 11,000 regular ministers. There are 2,000 more M. E. Sunday schools than churches.

Georgia has a law under which no one can vote who has not paid his taxes. A Georgia paper states that on account of unpaid taxes there are over 7,000 voters in Sumter county who cannot take part in the coming election. About three-fourths of this number are colored people, and although their taxes are generally very light, it is easy to see the object of [illegible].

The late Senator Nesmith of Oregon was the only man ever sent to Congress who had the courage to write in a biographical sketch for the Congressional Directory: "I received no education." He went to Oregon when a boy, with his father, and when that country was a wilderness. When he was elected Senator he had never seen a railroad nor a locomotive. He died insane.

Bedloe's Island, in New York harbor, where the great liberty statue from France is to be erected, has a curious history, which makes it an appropriate place for a memorial to liberty. Its owner was Mr. Isaac Bedloe, and in 1670 the Governor of the State issued an instrument declaring that, for and in consideration of valuable improvements made by Mr. Bedloe on his island, it should in the future be known as Love Island, and should be a privileged place, where no arrest could be made or warrant served except by special consent of the Governor. The people did not take kindly to the change of name; the island continued to be known as Bedloe's. In looking up the history of the island, deeds were found to the most valuable part of New York, on both sides of Broadway, which was sold to Isaac Bedloe about 200 years ago for $1 an acre. Bedloe's Island is directly in front of the city, not over a mile from the Battery and Castle Garden.

Capt. W. H. H[illegible] reports that while on board the schooner Elizabeth, bound from New York to Newbern, N. C., he met with a heavy gale off Hatteras, wind northeast, heavy sea. He could not clear the Diamond, and had to scud through Hatteras Slough. The sea boarded the vessel and took the bulwarks away. Fearing for the vessel's safety, oil was poured over the stern, a little at a time, from an ordinary stone jug. This at once smoothed the sea's surface, making it partake of the nature of a ground-swell; and the Elizabeth went in without shipping any more seas. A brig, seeing the smooth water astern of the vessel, steered for her wake, and ran through under close-reefed topsails, keeping in the smooth water.—Science.

The question as to what is to become of the medium class sailing craft on the lakes is being much discussed in marine circles. The large steambarges, built expressly for carrying heavy tonnage and making quick time, are able to transport grain, flour and coal so cheaply that the schooners find it almost impossible to compete with them. In the lumber trade steambarges are rapidly superseding sail vessels. Many of the old schooners will be kept afloat as long as they can carry lumber, but it is probable that fewer sail vessels, in proportion to the total of lake craft, will be built hereafter than formerly. As the east shore pine supply diminishes, the schooner interest will decline. At first thought it might be predicted that the lake marine, as a whole, will be less important when the pine supply is well toward exhaustion, than now. But it must be borne in mind that, as pine diminishes in quantity, the productive capacity, in other respects, of the regions bordering on the great lakes will increase. There is a vast hard wood supply remaining that will go to market in the form of lumber and various forms of more elaborate manufacture. The iron, copper and silver mining industry of the Lake Superior country is in the infancy of development. The salt interest of western Michigan will probably become immense. There are vast quarries of stone on the upper peninsula that will more and more furnish material for building up the great cities on the shore of the lakes. The agriculture of the lower peninsula of Michigan, and, to a large extent, the upper is yet to develop numerous thriving cities and towns along the shores of our fresh water seas. Many of them will become manufacturing centers, and their products will seek western and southern markets by means of lake marine. The east shore of Lake Michigan is destined to become, at no distant day, one stretch of fruit orchard and vegetable garden that will expand in proportion to the growth of this and the other cities on the western shore; this will, in the season of navigation, employ many vessels. Altogether there is a fair future for the men who go down to the unsalted seas in ships, even after the lumber business shall have become a minor feature of commerce.—Lumberman.

The Maccabees.

This benevolent order called "The Knights of the Maccabees," rests upon the broadest principles of mutual aid and fraternal intercourse in all the social relations of life. The brethren of this order had a chance to exemplify their work and principles, last Sabbath. The camp of Charlevoix, uniting with their brethren of the East Jordan camp in the burial of Sir Knight J. Marsh Worthington, who died last Friday. The funeral was the largest that has ever occurred in that place. There was a desire to see the workings of the order; after the solemn ceremonies at the grave it was a frequent remark that the society possessed elements of power, calculated to win public favor. The deceased Brother was a laboring man, with a large family; pressed to keep up his standing, and was in fact when he was taken sick suspended for non payment of dues; but when he was reported sick the generous brethren took the money out of their pockets, and reinstated him, so that he did a beneficiary, and his helpless family are provided with $1000. Aside from this no want of the family went unrequited, and we learn that all burial expenses were donated. In this the first illustration of this order in these points, we have a recommendation that will go far to bring the Maccabees prominent as a first-class institution. To be helpful, is to be possessed of the elements of holiness, for holiness is help, since sin is hindrance. To lift a helpless family above want, is not only religious helpfulness, but is the ultimate touchstone of holiness. If praying and singing be true worship, it must be so because attached to the mercy of help, held out to the unfortunate sojourner of earth whose wounds have been stanched by the cordials of brotherly love. All of which we find exemplified in the last Sabbath's work of the Maccabees.

Rev. J. T. Iddings of Charlevoix delivered the discourse of the occasion.

Mortgage Sale.

Whereas default has been made in the payment of a mortgage bearing date December 6th 1883, executed by Fred W. Shoecraft to David W. Russ of Petoskey Michigan, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County State of Michigan, in Liber 8 of Mortgages on page 303, on the 14th day of December 1883, and whereas there is claimed to be due on said Mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of Six Hundred [illegible] Dollars, and no proceedings at law or in equity having been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage: now, therefore notice is hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and of the statute in such case made and provided, the premises described in said mortgage, to wit: The South-west quarter (¼) of Section Thirty (30) in Township Thirty-four (34) North of Range Four (4) West, Charlevoix County, and State of Michigan, or so much thereof as may be necessary to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage with costs and expenses and an Attorney fee of Thirty dollars as provided in said mortgage, will be sold at public auction to the highest bidder at the front entrance of Loveday's Hall in East Jordan, Charlevoix County and State of Michigan, (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court for said county) on the 18th day of September, 1885, at 12 o'clock, noon.
Dated June 22d 1885.

—John Otis, proprietor of the Mancelona broom factory—one of the largest in the State—has purchased a mammoth new freight car from the Terre Haute car shops. She arrived from Chicago with a large load of broom corn one day last week, and immediately loaded with eleven hundred dozens of brooms for Richmond, Va. The dimensions of the car are, length, 40 feet, height, eight feet, ordinary width. It is painted a straw color and presents a neat appearance.—Herald.

—A grove meeting is being held near the residence of Hiram Warner, about six miles west from the village of Elmira. It commenced on Friday, July 3, at 10:30 a. m., and closes Sunday evening, July 12th. Rev. B. H. Whitman, of Charlevoix, officiates as presiding elder. Reverends Eagle of Cross Village, Ambrose of Mancelona, Thurston of Boyne City, Blake of South Arm, Wood of Ironton, Iddings of Charlevoix, and others are expected to be present.

—From the Valparaiso Daily Vidette we clip the following:

"We are glad to announce this morning the marriage of two of our most worthy young people, Robert W. Paddock, of Volo, Lake county, Illinois, and Mamie Nicholls, of Charlevoix, Michigan. The ceremony took place at Cassopolis, Mich., and was performed by W. J. Arney, at the European Hotel, May 28, 1885. Mr. Paddock is one of our best young men in every way worthy of his beautiful and charming bride. Miss Nicholls is a model young lady of the purest kind. We wish them a happy journey through life."

—From the following, clipped from the Grand Rapids Eagle, it would seem that our "hot sure" railroad is to soon take another leap Charlevoixward: "The people at Traverse City are persuaded that work on the extension of the Chicago and West Michigan to their town will not be long delayed. General Manager Mulliken has been over the ground recently, from Baldwin to Traverse City, and has had conferences with wealthy property owners at Traverse City and along the route. Hon. Perry Hannah remarked to one of the editors of the Eagle, recently, that the road is to be built, and at once. He is a man who is not in the habit of making rash statements, and, further, is able to make good his statements from his own means usually. The plan embodied in the extension is said to be as follows, by Traverse City people. The building of the road will open a new and very direct through route between Traverse City and Chicago via this city. Then, it is believed there, a road will be built from Newaygo to Howard City, thus, with the D., L. & N. making a new and excellent route from Northern Michigan to Detroit."

—With genuine pleasure we shook hands with Brother Abbott of the Bellaire Breeze last Monday. He was the guest of his brother at "Abbottsford" over the tournament.

—Henry Baker of New York state, who purchased the Inwood farm last week for $3,800 through Upright Bros. agency, has taken the SENTINEL for some time. Oh, it pays to advertise.

—Ben Davis, whose Pilgrim's Progress is hardly as orthodox on piscatorial matters as its name ought to imply, telephones us that Col. Crichton caught 42 bass in two hours casting, last week.

—Boyne City is having a building boom, and it is incited by the fair prospect of getting the county seat. Charlevoix holds the key to the situation and will have something to say when the time comes.—Telegraph.

—Roscoe Conkling says that the smallest county newspaper is worth more to its country subscribers in one month than its price for a year, and does more for its neighborhood for nothing than many a high official does for his munificent salary.

—In by-gone-age Charlevoix was a favorite resort for the Mound-builders. A large number of people of different race and civilization are willing to testify that in this respect at least that ancient race gave evidence of good taste, etc.—Telegraph.

—Morgan Bates and Elwin Barron have together written a play called "A Moral crime," which will be brought upon the boards for the first time at the Columbia theater, Chicago, July 6. The play relates to events supposed to have taken place in Paris over 100 years ago.

—Members of the Baxter Post, G. A. R. who attended the celebration at Traverse City July 3d and 4th, speak in the highest terms of the hospitable manner in which they were treated. There were seven posts in attendance, that from Charlevoix, Norwood and up the lake numbering 40 guns.

—On Saturday, July 11th, the Orangemen will celebrate the Battle of the Boyne. A grand good time is expected. There will be several neighboring lodges in attendance. It is also expected that the G. A. R. posts of this region will have a celebration at this place on that day. Come everybody and enjoy highly.—East Jordan Enterprise

—One of the pleasantest surprises among the G. A. R. Posts at Traverse City the Fourth was the meeting between M. J. Stockman of this place and Mason Kidder of Mancelona, two veterans who had not seen each other since parting on a southern battle field in '64, when the former presented Mr. Kidder with a rebel officer's sword which he had captured.

—We notice elsewhere the marriage of one of Charlevoix's well known and favorite young people, Miss Mamie Nicholls, youngest daughter of Hon. John Nicholls, to Mr. Robert Paddock of Volo, Ills., who has been attending the normal school at Valparaiso the past year, and who becomes an M. D., next season. Mr. and Mrs. Paddock leave for their new home in Volo, today. Mrs. Mamie has an unusually large circle of friends whose thoughts and best wishes will follow her, and always desire her truest happiness.

—A law passed at the last session of the legislature in reference to the counting of votes at election is of the greatest importance, and the men who constitute our election boards should familiarize themselves therewith. It provides that all precincts having 200 or more votes, two ballot boxes shall be provided, one to be used from the opening of the poll till 12 o'clock, when it shall be closed. Two additional inspectors and clerks are to be appointed, and the inspectors divide themselves into two classes, and after 12 o'clock one class to be counting while the other is receiving ballots. During the afternoon the boxes are to be changed every hour, and the counting proceed. This method will greatly facilitate the counting, and ensure speedy returns, so that an accurate knowledge of the votes cast in the entire state may be had very soon after the polls are closed.

—Speaking of the concert given in East Jordan last Wednesday evening by Miss Cheney, assisted by Charlevoix talent, the Enterprise says: "The concert last night was listened to by a large and select audience of our best citizens, who manifested their delight by generous applause and frequent encores. The singing of Miss Cheney was very fine, and showed a cultivation and taste, incomparably greater than any we have ever before listened to in this place. She was encored at each appearance, and her responses evoked greater enthusiasm, if possible, than the selections on the regular program, for the reason perhaps that they were less severely classical. The instrumental music by Miss Kane and Miss [illegible] was of a high order, the songs by the little people were well rendered, the character song was encored, and the quartett singing was good. The concert was a success. Miss Cheney will be sure of a warm welcome, and [illegible] whenever she may favor our citizens again."

BALL AND BAT.

The Fourth at Charlevoix Devoted to The "National Game."

The project, conceived in the minds of some of our zealous base ballists, of discarding the old fashioned and time honored method of celebrating Independence Day this year—with its oration, long-winded Declaration of Independence, and the "horribles,"—and making it a gathering of the base ball clans, was for a time thought to be unwise. But the outcome more than justified the plan, and the Fourth at Charlevoix was an unqualified success.

The crowd was fully as large as at any previous celebration here, and the day more enjoyable, in our opinion, than it could have been had the traditional old fashioned programme been followed.

Four clubs were entered for the contest, and the prizes offered were as follows: 1st prize, a gold medal, $50 in cash, and the championship of the Grand Traverse region; 2d prize, a silver medal, and $25 in money; 3d prize, a rosewood bat and $10 in money.

The grounds selected on the south side were occupied in the morning by the Harbor Springs and Charlevoix clubs, who closed the game out at one o'clock, the Harbor Springs boys winning the game by 21 to 15. In the afternoon, the Boyne City and Harbor Springs clubs played a closely contested game, the Boyne City club beating their opponents in nine innings, by 45 to 30.

On the north side, the morning game opened with the Boyne City and Bellaire clubs in the field, and the Bellaire boys walked away with the game to the tune of 50 to 34.

The afternoon game on the north side was between the Charlevoix and Bellaire boys, and the home club reversed their morning record on the other side, by defeating the Antrim county lads by 25 to 6. Night came and the prizes were yet ungained, and a conference arranged to finish the contest on the 16th of July, at which time the contest will be settled on the same grounds. Charlevoix and Boyne City will meet each other, and Bellaire and Harbor Springs will occupy the diamond.

The winners of these games will then play for the first and second prizes, respectively, and the losers will play for 3d money—in the final game the loser in the contest for 1st prize taking second.

It is expected that two days will be occupied in the contest, and it is expected that the occasion will be one of great interest and largely attended.

The playing on the Fourth was watched with much interest by large crowds on both grounds, and some good playing was scored by various members of all the clubs.

For East Jordanites To Read.

If Boyne City gets the county seat next spring (of which she is sure) she will have a standard gauge railroad within one year thereafter.—Statesman.

—Healthy place, Northern Michigan. Since 1866 there have been 1,735 births, 609 marriages, and 655 deaths in Antrim county. In 1884 there were 115 births, 77 marriages, and 17 deaths.

—The experience of the Traverse City Herald is similar to that of many other Northern Michigan papers that we reprint the following food for thought: "The Boyne City Statesman complains because the common council of that village failed to appropriate any funds for the publication of the proceedings of the council meetings. It cites Petoskey, which pays the Record $75 per year for this work. It is true that most villages and cities in the state pay for such publication, but we can tell the Statesman for its comfort, that the Traverse City papers have always given all the proceedings of the village council in full, in their columns, without hope of or request for fee or reward of any kind. There are a good many things that newspapers do for the benefit of their towns or counties, and the public at large and individually, for which they receive no pay. Merchants and business men generally, do not always appreciate the fact, that the columns of a paper constitute the stock in trade of a publisher; that it costs money for every line of matter; that a line of space is just like so much merchandise; that it means a pound of sugar or a yard of calico or a pound of nails; that the sale of these lines of type earns the bread and meat of the editor's family just as the sale of the sugar and calico and nails earns the bread and meat of the merchant's family. Most any man can ask an editor for an inch or two of space in his local but it takes a good deal of cheek to step into a store and ask a merchant to give one fifty cents or a dollar's worth of tea. This has nothing to do with what we started out to say to the Statesman, but grew out of that, and may be considered an annex."

Last week Tuesday Mrs. Lucille Yseult Dudley was acquitted of the charge of attempting murder on O'Donovan Rossa. After deliberating for five minutes the jury returned a verdict of "not guilty," on the theory of insanity.

THE LAWLERIAN PROPOSITION.

Hon. Frank Lawler's Recent Political Deliverance.

Only a few days ago one of the most eminent lawyers at the American bar remarked in conversation "that there is not a conspicuously great man in Congress, and some are such fools that they would rather be abused than neglected." This judgment was based upon knowledge of the Forty-eighth Congress. It is certainly not true of the Forty-ninth, for among the members of that body must be numbered that great genius for affairs of state, the Hon. Frank Lawler.

This Congressman-elect, the pride and ornament of Chicago, proposed that the distribution of the patronage shall be along the lines of nationality. The Americans have two offices already, and ought to be satisfied. These two are the postmaster and the United States marshal. What there are left ought, he claims, to be distributed among the Germans, the Irish, the Scandinavians, the Bohemians, the Poles and the French. The order of enumeration is his. It is to be remembered that there are two collectorships, the sub-treasury, a pension agency, the appraisership and the attorneyship yet to be filled, six in all, just the number of nationalities mentioned. This can not have been accidental. Evidently there was method in Mr. Lawler's sanity. So far as concerns natives of this country, Messrs. Judd and Marsh fill the quota.

"This here proposition," as the writer aptly terms it, might be open to some objection. The English, Scotch and Welsh might think they are as deserving of consideration as the Bohemians, Poles and French, but it was necessary to draw the line somewhere. All Europe and Africa, with a good part of Asia, are represented in this cosmopolitan city. There are not offices enough to go around. Being an Hibernian statesman Lawler could not be expected to provide for the odious people across the channel, north or east. His Irish constituents will please take note of the cold shoulder he turned to England, Scotland and Wales. Not even a desire to promote harmony in the Democratic party could make him forget what was due from a true son of Erin.

"This here proposition" could not have been more timely. The very day it was submitted to the President and to our Washington bureau the Cabinet [...]

[...] like M. C. Butler, Hampton, Lamar, Jonas, Bayard and Reagan lived for that, and have at last achieved their desire. But the fraudulent victory they have gained is likely to be the cause of their final destruction. Heart-burnings and jealousies are everywhere apparent, and quarrels over the spoils have already sprung up in several States. Divisions exist as to who shall and shall not hold office, and Cleveland can only satisfy one faction or class of aspirants. The rejected ones and their friends are made to boil over with wrath, and they curse an Administration from which they expected much and receive nothing. The action of the Administration, let it be what it may, is sowing division in the ranks of the Southern Democracy and preparing several States to transfer their allegiance to the Republican party. Admit that Cleveland is the unwilling instrument in bringing this disruption about, he can not help himself or overcome the inevitable. The fates are against him and his party, and both are destined to a final and lasting defeat.—Cleveland Leader.

A "REMINISCENCE."

What the Administration of Mr. Cleveland Has Done Toward Unsettling the Decisions of the Past.

"The Republican party is a reminiscence," said the last National Democratic platform; the questions which have divided parties in times past are settled. This assertion had in it a semblance of truth. But it was true only on the supposition that another party, if intrusted with power, would respect the decisions of the people in the past, and would refrain from all reactionary steps calculated to disturb the settlements which had been made. Those settlements could be disturbed as well by disregard of the spirit as by violation of the letter. If so disturbed, the questions could no longer be considered settled. In that case the Republican party could no longer be deemed, even by the Democrats, a mere reminiscence, but it must still be the embodiment of the deliberate purpose of the people, which the Democratic party has pledged itself to respect and has not respected.

Let us see what the fact is. President Cleveland was inaugurated over three months ago. His Administration has already given some clear indications of its ruling ideas and aims. What do the people think of it? Does it honor and faithfully respect those settlements of [...]

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that deadly disease Malaria, with all its malignant effects, Dyspepsia, Female Prostration, Tired Feelings, Debility, Constipation, Skin Diseases, Sick Headache, Diarrhoea, Eruptions, Scrofulous Sores, Malassimilation of Food, Kidney and Liver Complaints are easily and permanently cured by using Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, a purely vegetable tonic, the Best Known. We do not claim that it is a cure for everything, but as the health and vigor of the system depends on the purity and vitality of the blood, we conclude that a medicine that gives life and vigor to the blood as Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier does eradicates all traces of impurity and disease from it. Try it before it is too late.

WHAT THEY SAY.

Brownsville, Tenn.

W. C. Lewis Medicine Co.,—Gents:—It is with much pleasure that I inform you that Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier has entirely cured me of all traces of Indigestion.

Yours truly,
M. Raymond.

PRINCE TONIC

Hamilton, Mo., Nov. 7, '81.

W. C. Lewis Med. Co., Gentlemen:—I have been afflicted for years with Malignant Blood Poisoning, and had given up all hope of ever being any better, until a friend advised me to try Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, which I did with the most satisfactory results. I have entirely recovered and am enjoying perfect health. I consider your remedy a very valuable preparation for all blood diseases, and general disorders.

Very truly yours,
Leonard Lyon.

BLOOD PURIFIER

Paris, Ky., May 29, '81.

W. C. Lewis Medicine Co.:—For several years I have been prostrated every spring with Malarial Fever, until life had become almost unbearable. This year I stole a march, and began early to take your preparation, Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, the result is, I have escaped entirely. I am sure too much can not be said in its favor, as a preventative for Malaria.

Yours very truly,

TAKE A VACATION.

Exhaustive Labor Calls for Seasons of Rest.

Dr. Talmage on the Temptations Which Beset Men in the Hours of Relaxation—Notes of Warning—The Living Fountain.

"July and August Temptations" was the subject of a recent sermon by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, delivered at the Brooklyn Tabernacle. The text was from Mark vi., 31: "Come ye yourselves apart into a desert place, and rest awhile." Dr. Talmage said:

Here Christ advises His apostles to take a vacation. They had been living an excited as well as useful life, and He advises that they get out into the country. When six weeks ago standing in this place I advocated, with all the energy I could command, the Saturday afternoon holiday, I did not think the people would so soon get that release. By divine fiat it has come, and I rejoice that more people will have opportunity of recreation this summer than in any previous summer. Others will have whole weeks and months of rest. The railroad trains are being laden with passengers and baggage on their way to the mountains and the lakes and the seashore. Multitudes of our citizens are packing their trunks for a restorative absence.

Let not the commercial firm begrudge the clerk, or the employer the journeyman, or the patient the physician, or the church its pastor a season of inoccupation. Luther used to sport with his children; Edmund Burke used to caress his favorite horse; Thomas Chalmers, in the dark hour of the Church's disruption, played kite for recreation—so I was told by his own daughter—and the busy Christ said to the busy Apostles: "Come ye apart awhile into the desert and rest yourselves." And I have observed that they who do not know how to rest do not know how to work.

A NOTE OF WARNING.

But I have to declare this truth to-day that some of our fashionable watering-places are the temporal and eternal destruction of "a multitude that no man can number;" and amid the congratulations of this season and the prospect of the departure of many of you for the country I must utter a note of warning, plain, earnest and unmistakable. The first temptation that is apt to hover in this direction [...]

[...] ing system. I never knew a man yet who could give himself to the pleasures of the turf for a long reach of time and not be battered in morals. They hook up their spanking team and put on their sporting-cap and light their cigar and take the reins and dash down the road to perdition. The great day at Saratoga and Long Branch and Cape May and nearly all the other watering-places is the day of the races. The hotels are thronged; nearly every kind of equipage is taken up at an almost fabulous price; and there are many respectable people mingling with jockeys and gamblers and libertines and foul-mouthed men and flashy women. The bartender stirs up the brandy-smash. The bets run high. The greenhorns, supposing all is fair, put in their money, soon enough to lose it. Three weeks before the race takes place the struggle is decided, and the men in the secret know on which steed to bet their money. The two men on the horses riding around long before arranged who should beat. Leaning from the stand or the carriage are men and women so absorbed in the struggle of bone and muscle and mettle that they make a grand harvest for the pickpockets, who carry off the pocket-books and portmonnaies. Men looking on see only two horses with two riders flying around the ring; but there is many a man on that stand whose honor and domestic happiness and fortune—white mane, white foot, white flank—are in the ring, racing with inebriety, and with fraud, and with profanity, and with ruin—black neck, black foot, black flank. Neck and neck they go in that moral Epsom. White horse of honor; black horse of ruin. Death says: "I will bet on the black horse." Spectator says: "I will bet on the white horse." The white horse of honor a little way ahead. The black horse of ruin, Satan mounted all the time, gaining on him. Spectator breathless. Put on the lash. Dig in the spurs. There! They are past the stand. Sure. Just as I expected it. The black horse of ruin has won the race and all the galleries of darkness cry "Huzza! huzza!" and the devils come in to pick up their wagers. Ah, my friends, have nothing to do with horse-racing dissipations this summer. Long ago the English Government got through looking to the turf for the dragoon and light cavalry horse. They found the turf depreciates the stock; and it is yet worse for men. Thomas Hughes, the member of Parliament, and the author known all the world over, hearing that a new turf enterprise was being started in this country, wrote a letter, in which he [...]

MR. S. K. CHASE,

Of Chase's Market, Lowell, Mass., is frequently called upon for information in regard to his wonderful cure by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

He assures all inquirers that his testimonial is strictly true. Here it is:—

From my infancy I was afflicted with Scrofula. The doctors pronounced my case incurable, and were of the opinion that Consumption, induced by scrofulous poison in the blood, would terminate my life. About five years ago I had become so debilitated that to do a day's work was an impossibility. I was completely discouraged when a friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I bought one bottle, took the Sarsaparilla regularly, and began to improve at once. Continuing the treatment, I was permanently cured—taking less than one dozen bottles in all. The virulent sores, which had eaten through my neck in a number of places, rapidly healed, and my strength gradually increased, until I became a vigorous man, as I am to-day.—S. K. Chase, with I. M. THE LAWLERIAN PROPOSITION.

Hon. Frank Lawler's Recent Political Deliverance.

Only a few days ago one of the most eminent lawyers at the American bar remarked in conversation "that there is not a conspicuously great man in Congress and some are such fools that they would rather be abused than neglected." This judgment was based upon knowledge of the Forty-eighth Congress. It is certainly not true of the Forty-ninth, for among the members of that body must be numbered that great genius for affairs of state, the Hon. Frank Lawler.

This Congressman elect, the pride and ornament of Chicago, proposed that the distribution of the patronage shall be along the lines of nationality. The Americans have two offices already, and ought to be satisfied. These two are the postmaster and the United States marshal. What there are left ought, he claims, to be distributed among the Germans, the Irish, the Scandinavians, the Bohemians, the Poles and the French. The order of enumeration is his. It is to be remembered that there are two collectorships, the sub-treasury, a pension agency, the appraisership and the attorneyship yet to be filled, six in all, just the number of nationalities mentioned. This can not have been accidental. Evidently there was method in Mr. Lawler's sanity. So far as concerns natives of this country, Messrs. Judd and Marsh fill the quota.

"This here proposition," as the writer aptly terms it, might be open to some objection. The English, Scotch and Welsh might think they are as deserving of consideration as the Bohemians, Poles and French, but it was necessary to draw the line somewhere. All Europe and Africa, with a good part of Asia, are represented in this cosmopolitan city. There are not offices enough to go around. Being an Hibernian statesman Lawler could not be expected to provide for the odious people across the channel, north or east. His Irish constituents will please take note of the cold shoulder he turned to England, Scotland and Wales. ...

... like M. C. Butler, Hampton, Lamar, Jonas Bayard and Reagan lived for that, and have at last achieved their desire. But the fraudulent victory they have gained is likely to be the cause of their final destruction. Heart-burnings and jealousies are everywhere apparent, and quarrels over the spoils have already sprung up in several States. Divisions exist as to who shall and shall not hold office, and Cleveland can only satisfy one faction or class of aspirants. The rejected ones and their friends are made to boil over with wrath, and they curse an Administration from which they expected much and receive nothing. The action of the Administration, let it be what it may, is sowing division in the ranks of the Southern Democracy and preparing several States to transfer their allegiance to the Republican party. Admit that Cleveland is the unwilling instrument in bringing this disruption about, he can not help himself or overcome the inevitable. The fates are against him and his party, and both are destined to a final and lasting defeat.—Cleveland Leader.

A "REMINISCENCE."

What the Administration of Mr. Cleveland Has Done Toward Unsettling the Decisions of the Past.

"The Republican party is a reminiscence," said the last National Democratic platform; the questions which have divided parties in times past are settled. This assertion had in it a semblance of truth. But it was true only on the supposition that another party, if intrusted with power, would respect the decisions of the people in the past, and would refrain from all reactionary steps calculated to disturb the settlements which had been made. Those settlements could be disturbed as well by disregard of the spirit as by violation of the letter. If so disturbed, the questions could no longer be considered settled. In that case the Republican party could no longer be deemed, even by the Democrats, a mere reminiscence, but it must still be the embodiment of the deliberate purpose of the people, which the Democratic party has pledged ...

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that deadly disease Malaria, with all its malignant effects, Dyspepsia, Female Prostration, Tired Feelings, Debility, Constipation, Skin Diseases, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Eruptions, Scrofulous Sores, Malassimilation of Food, Kidney and Liver Complaints are easily and permanently cured by using Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier a purely vegetable tonic, the best known. We do not claim that it is a cure for everything, but as the health and vigor of the system depends on the purity and vitality of the blood, we conclude that a medicine that gives life and vigor to the blood as Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier does actually relieves all traces of impurity and disease from it. Try it before it is too late.

... ing system. I never knew a man yet who could give himself to the pleasures of the turf for a long reach of time and not be battered in morals. They hook up their spanking team and put on their sporting-cap and light their cigar and take the reins and dash down the road to perdition. The great day at Saratoga and Long Branch and Cape May and nearly all the other watering-places is the day of the races. The hotels are thronged; nearly every kind of equipage is taken up at an almost fabulous price; and there are many respectable people mingling with jockeys and gamblers and libertines and foul-mouthed men and flashy women. The bartender stirs up the brandy-smash. The bets run high. The greenhorns, supposing all is fair, put in their money, soon enough to lose it. Three weeks before the race takes place the struggle is decided, and the men in the secret know on which steed to bet their money. The two men on the horses riding around long before arranged who should beat. Leaning from the stand or the carriage are men and women so absorbed in the struggle of bone and muscle and mettle that they make a grand harvest for the pickpockets, who carry off the pocket-books and portmonnaies. Men looking on see only two horses with two riders flying around the ring; but there is many a man on that stand whose honor and domestic happiness and fortune—white mane, white foot, white flank—are in the ring, racing with inebriety, and with fraud, and with profanity, and with ruin—black neck, black foot, black flank. Neck and neck they go in that moral Epsom. White horse of honor; black horse of ruin. Death says: "I will bet on the black horse." Spectator says: "I will bet on the white horse." The white horse of honor a little way ahead. The black horse of ruin, Satan mounted all the time, gaining on him. Spectator breathless. Put on the lash. Dig in the spurs. There! They are past the stand. Sure. Just as I expected it. The black horse of ...

MR. S. K. CHASE,

Of Chase's Market, Lowell, Mass., is frequently called upon for information in regard to his wonderful cure by the use of

Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

He assures all inquirers that his testimonial is strictly true. Here it is:—

From my infancy I was afflicted with Scrofula. The doctors pronounced my case incurable, and were of the opinion that Consumption, induced by scrofulous poison in the blood, would terminate my life. About five years ago I had become so debilitated that to do a day's work was an impossibility. I was completely discouraged, when a friend advised me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I bought one bottle, took the Sarsaparilla regularly, and began to improve at once. Continuing the treatment, I was permanently cured—taking less than one dozen bottles in all. The virulent sores, which had eaten through my neck in a number of places, rapidly healed, and my strength gradually increased, until I became a vigorous man, as I am to-day.—S. K. Chase, with T. M. Chase, Provision Dealer, 253 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.

THE LAWLERIAN PROPOSITION.

Hon. Frank Lawler's Recent Political Deliverance.

Only a few days ago one of the most eminent lawyers at the American bar remarked in conversation "that there is not a [illegible] great man in Congress, and some are such fools that they would rather be abused than neglected." This judgment was based upon knowledge of the Forty-eighth Congress. It is certainly not true of the Forty-ninth, for among the members of that body must be numbered that great genius for affairs of state, the Hon. Frank Lawler.

This Congressman-elect, the pride and ornament of Chicago, proposed that the distribution of the patronage shall be along the lines of nationality. The Americans have two offices already, and ought to be satisfied. These two are the postmaster and the United States marshal. What three are left ought, he claims, to be distributed among the Germans, the Irish, the Scandinavians, the Bohemians, the Poles and the French. The order of enumeration is his. It is to be remembered that there are two collectorships, the sub-treasury, a pension agency, the appraisership and the attorneyship yet to be filled, six in all, just the number of nationalities mentioned. This can not have been accidental. Evidently there was method in Mr. Lawler's sanity. So far as concerns natives of this country, Messrs. [illegible] and Marsh fill the quota.

"This here proposition," as the writer aptly terms it, might be open to some objection. The English, Scotch and Welsh might think they are as deserving of consideration as the Bohemians, Poles and French, but it was necessary to draw the line somewhere. All Europe and Africa, with a good part of Asia, are represented in this cosmopolitan city. There are not offices enough to go around. Being an Hibernian statesman Lawler could not be ex- [illegible]

like M. C. Butler, Hampton, Lamar, Jonas, Bayard and Reagan lived for that, and have at last achieved their desire. But the fraudulent victory they have gained is likely to be the cause of their final destruction. Heart-burnings and jealousies are everywhere apparent, and quarrels over the spoils have already sprung up in several States. Divisions exist as to who shall and shall not hold office, and Cleveland can only satisfy one faction or class of aspirants. The rejected ones and their friends are made to boil over with wrath, and they curse an Administration from which they expected much and receive nothing. The action of the Administration, let it be what it may, is sowing division in the ranks of the Southern Democracy and preparing several States to transfer their allegiance to the Republican party. Admit that Cleveland is the unwilling instrument in bringing this disruption about, he can not help himself or overcome the inevitable. The fates are against him and his party, and both are destined to a final and lasting defeat.—Cleveland Leader.

A "REMINISCENCE."

What the Administration of Mr. Cleveland Has Done Toward Unsettling the Decisions of the Past.

"The Republican party is a reminiscence," said the last National Democratic platform; the questions which have divided parties in times past are settled. This assertion had in it a semblance of truth. But it was true only on the supposition that another party, if intrusted with power, would respect the decisions of the people in the past, and would refrain from all reactionary steps calculated to disturb the settlements which had been made. Those settlements could be disturbed as well by disregard of the spirit as by violation of the letter. If so disturbed, the questions could no longer be considered settled. In that case the Republican party could no longer be deemed, even [illegible]

A CORRESPONDENT of the Los Angeles (Cal.) Times reports that along the southern coast of Mexico the people have a habit of inoculating themselves with the virus of the rattlesnake or adder, which renders them absolutely safe forever afterward from the bite or sting of the deadliest reptiles.

OREGON has its antiquities, even if it is a new State. About a hundred years ago an old tree blew down. Recently an eccentric genius hollowed out the stump, cut a door and window in it, and made of it a cozy room in which he lives. He estimates that his house is nearly five hundred years old.

IT is announced that the census report this year will not make a very flattering showing for Colorado. The three years just past have been hard ones for miners, and thousands have left the State. True, the other interests have developed, but the population has not increased very much within the last five years.

THE officials of Savannah, Ga., recently ordered all bill-boards to be pulled down and destroyed, and refuse to allow blank walls to be defaced by advertisements. Avertisers say so long as others are refused the privilege they "are perfectly willing to submit, as bill-posting on the street always costs more than it returns."

A CORONER'S jury at Silverton, Col., had recently about completed an inquest in the case of Mrs. Gracie V. Marsh, who had taken poison with suicidal intent, when the subject was found to be still alive. The inquest was adjourned, but Mrs. Marsh subsequently died, and a verdict of suicide was then rendered.

UNTIL the present tour of Mexican editors to the principal cities in the United States not one in twenty of the fraternity had ever stepped foot in this country, and had no personal knowledge of the representative people. When they return home the various members will have gained some ideas that must redound to the benefit of both republics.

IN France lightning has killed 4,609 persons since 1835. An equal number have been seriously, though not fatally, wounded, and five times as many struck. The hot years were the most fatal, and these are remarkable as having been the best wine seasons. There has not been a single death from lightning in Paris or the Department of the Seine since 1864, though there have been many violent storms there during that time.

REV. LUIGI BONOMI, an Italian priest, escaped recently from El Mehdi's camp, wherein he had long been a captive, and arrived at Dongola. He confirmed the report that El Mehdi's forces had been repeatedly defeated by the Sennaar garrison, and said that Kordofan was scourged by famine and disease. El Mehdi had issued twelve "commandments," one of which enjoined the killing of all foreigners who did not become Mussulmans.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Interesting News Compilation.

FROM WASHINGTON.

IT was stated on the 26th by General Clark, Clerk of the House of Representatives, that there would be fewer contested election cases before the next Congress than there had been before any Congress for forty years. There would not be more than four and probably not more than three cases.

THERE were 204 business failures in the United States and Canada during the seven days ended on the 26th, against 193 the previous seven days. The distribution was as follows: Middle States, 25; New England States, 31; Western, 48; Southern, 41; Pacific States and Territories, 29; Canada, 20.

ON the 26th the work of repairing the damage done to the Washington monument by lightning, and placing additional lightning rods in position on the roof of the structure, was completed.

AT twenty-six leading clearing-houses in the United States the exchanges during the week ended on the 27th aggregated $671,259,597, against $771,023,280 the previous week. As compared with the corresponding period of 1884, the falling off amounts to 18.8 per cent.

EDWARD L. HEDDEN was on the 27th appointed Collector of the Port of New York, Henry S. Beattie Surveyor of Customs, and Silas W. Burt Naval Officer. Horatio C. Burchard, Director of the Mint, was suspended, and James P. Kimball, of Philadelphia, was appointed in his stead.

IN the statuary hall of the Capitol the marble statue of the late President Garfield was unveiled on the 29th ult. The statue is from the hands of the sculptor Niehaus, and came here direct from Rome.

DURING the week ended on the 27th ult. the issue of standard dollars from the mints was $441,497. The issue during the corresponding period of last year was $330,481.

DURING the fiscal year ended on the 30th ult. the Government expenditures were $310,000,000; receipts, $321,000,000; about $7,500,000 less than the estimates. The reduction of the public debt was about $58,000,000.

THE order requiring naval officers attached to cruising vessels to leave their families at their fixed places of abode has been revoked by the Secretary Whitney.

ON the 30th ult. the amount of National bank notes outstanding was $318,631,328, which was $20,252,940 less than the amount outstanding July 1, 1884. The number of new National banks established during the current fiscal year was 146, and the corporate existence of 733 banks was extended.

IN the Pension Office and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing a large number of dismissals were made on the 30th ult.

FRANCIS KERNAN, of New York; E. F. Noyes, of Ohio; E. P. Alexander, of Georgia; Franklin MacVeagh, of Illinois, and J. W. Savage, of Nebraska, have been appointed Government Directors of the Union Pacific Railroad.

THE EAST.

BEHIND THE BARS.

Fish, the ex-President of the Marine Bank, Sentenced to Serve Ten Years in the Auburn Penitentiary.

NEW YORK, June 29.—Mr. Fish came into the court-room at an early hour Saturday morning, accompanied by his counsel, Messrs. Clark and Stanley. He was dressed in dark colors, and his face wore its usual stolid expression. Judge Benedict entered the court-room shortly after ten o'clock. This was an hour earlier than the court usually opens, and there were but few persons present. As soon as the Judge seated himself, Assistant District Attorney Foster moved for sentence on "the prisoner, James D. Fish." Clerk Shields called the name and Fish walked firmly to the bar. He placed his hand on the rail and lifted his eyes to the Judge, who wiped his glasses carefully with a silk handkerchief, and said:

"James D. Fish, you are charged by the Grand Jury with many offenses against the laws of the United States. After a fair and impartial trial you were found guilty of the misappropriation of the funds of the Marine Bank, of which you were President. You were also found guilty of making false entries in the books of the bank while in that position. The verdict of the jury was that you were guilty. The evidence clearly showed that there could be no doubt as to your guilt. A more shameful or a more lawless abuse of the powers of a President of a National bank can scarcely be imagined. It is proper, therefore, that the punishment should be meted out to you, and in order that others may be deterred from similar offenses it is necessary that the full penalty of the law be pronounced on you. A merciful consideration for your age forbids a vindictive sentence. The sentence of the court is that you be confined in the prison at Auburn for ten years."

Fish did not change color or alter his expression when he heard the judgment. He showed agitation in no way. He walked from the court room leisurely and was returned to his quarters in the Ludlow Street Jail. The sentence is not considered to be severe. The commutation for good conduct will reduce the term to six years and six months. Fish is now 65 years old.

Fish was taken from jail at three o'clock Saturday afternoon and began his journey to Auburn Prison. A number of friends had come to see him off, and his daughter, whose devotion during his trial has been much admired, retained her place by his side. The banker's son, Irving, also accompanied him. Two marshals guarded the party from the jail to a Second avenue street car, on boarding which Fish paid the fares for all. He seemed in excellent spirits, and talked pleasantly with his companions. An affecting scene was witnessed when Fish threw his arms around his daughter's neck and bade her farewell. He was hurried aboard the train, and the children sorrowfully turned their steps homeward.

AUBURN, N. Y., June 29.—James D. Fish, ex-President of the Marine Bank, arrived at the prison yesterday. To-day he will be put in convict garb.

DESTRUCTIVE RAIN-STORM.

Baltimore and Vicinity Submerged by the Most Terrific Storm for Years—A Vast Amount of Property Swept Away and One Life Reported Lost.

BALTIMORE, Md., June 29.—This city was visited by a storm yesterday morning that caused more damage and created greater consternation than any similar visitation since the great flood in 1868. Rain began to descend in torrents about five o'clock, and continued to fall in great sheets for more than one hour. Soon Jones' Falls, which run through the center of the city, overflowed their banks, and the water backed into the neighboring streets. Harrison street, which is occupied by second-hand dealers, was deluged, and the lower floors of houses filled with water five and six feet deep. The occupants were entirely cut off from terra firma. The falls were behind and the flooded streets before them. Great consternation prevailed, and the cries of the women and children were heard above the raging of the storm. Such articles as could be saved were dragged to the upper stories, and excited people shrieked from the windows for aid. Deputy Marshal Frey and Captain Lannan, of the Central police station, assisted by other officers, rowed to the beleaguered houses in skiffs and took the children to places of safety. All this time the rainfall was terrific. Fortunately it was already daylight. Had it occurred two hours previously the loss of life would have been great. As it was, there were some narrow escapes.

During the storm the play of lightning was incessant, every gleam being followed by terrific claps of thunder. People in every household were astir. Westminster Presbyterian Church, a historical building, was struck by lightning and badly damaged. At Woodbury Fletcher Vandancker, a boss mechanic, was fatally injured by the giving away of a wall on which he was standing, while directing the saving of property. At Calverton stock-yards bridges were swept away and hogs swept down the falls and a number drowned. At Hamden, Canton and other suburban towns and villages there was also great loss of property, and the roads were left in a deplorable condition. In every portion of the city property-owners suffered to a greater or less degree. The total loss will amount in the aggregate to $250,000.

THE MAD ACTOR.

John McCullough Placed in an Asylum by Friends.

NEW YORK, June 29.—John McCullough, the tragedian, is in the Bloomingdale Asylum for the Insane. On Saturday afternoon he was invited to go out for a drive with three friends, one of whom was Captain William Connor, of the St. James Hotel. They went up Broadway and then along the boulevard chatting about indifferent matters and no hint was given of the true object of their drive. They had with them the necessary certificate from physicians who have examined the demented actor, and they drove directly to the asylum, where the party alighted and went to the office of Medical Superintendent Nichols. McCullough was easily induced to make a tour of inspection through the vast brown-stone building, which looks decidedly attractive from the outside. When the quarters reserved for McCullough were reached he was informed that he must remain in them, and despite his strenuous objections the door was closed upon him, and his friends regained their carriage and proceeded homeward. A reporter who visited the asylum yesterday was informed that the actor had been taken there late in the afternoon, and that he would be treated well.

Renegade Indians Defeated.

FORT BOWIE, Arizona, June 29.—A courier who has just arrived from the troops in the field in the Mexican Territory says that on the 23d Captain Crawford encountered a camp of Chiricahuas and killed one Indian, taking twenty-five squaws and children captive. He also captured five horses and a quantity of supplies. The squaws and children are en route to Fort Bowie, and will reach San Bernardino ranch to-day. This is the band of renegades which attacked Captain Lawton's supply train in Guadalupe Canyon and killed three soldiers. Captain Crawford is following the trail of another band into the Sierra Madre Mountains.

Director Burchard's Successor.

WASHINGTON, June 29.—Horatio C. Burchard, Director of the Mint, has been suspended by the President, and will be succeeded by James P. Kimball, of Pennsylvania. The latter is a mining engineer and metallurgist, and he is said to be in every way fitted for the office. Mr. Kimball served during the war as a staff officer with Generals McClellan, Burnside, Hooker and Meade.

The letter of Mr. Burchard refusing to tender his resignation as Director of the Mint is made public. He holds that the law creating the office does not contemplate a change in its incumbent on account of a change in Administration, or for personal or political reasons.

A WOMAN'S TONGUE.

Mrs. Dudley Placed on Trial for Her Attempt on O'Donovan Rossa's Life—A Rich Scene Enjoyed by the Spectators Caused by the Defendant's Frequent and Excited Remarks.

NEW YORK, June 30.—Mrs. Lucille Yseult Dudley was placed at the bar of the general court yesterday, charged with assaulting with intent to kill Jeremiah O'Donovan, alias Rossa. Judge Gildersleeve presided and the court-room was packed with an excited audience. Messrs. Fullerton, Fellows, Bedford and Howe, the leading criminal lawyers of the city, were present in the case, supplemented by Messrs. Purdy Keller, Price and Putts. When the clerk called Mrs. Dudley to the bar the prisoner jauntily responded, nodding and smiling as if she thought she was creating a sensation. She was dressed in white, and kept close to her leading counsel, ex-Judge Fullerton. When Rossa strolled in Mrs. Dudley glared at him. The jury was made up of eight German-speaking citizens and four pure Americans, all Irish and English jurymen being promptly rejected.

Rossa was the first witness called and then the fun began. When asked his name he answered: "Jeremiah O'Donovan Rossa."

"That's not his name. Where did he get the 'Rossa' from?" piped out the light, treble voice of the prisoner.

"What is your business?" was asked the witness.

"Dynamiter," answered the prisoner, despite the effort of a court officer to keep her quiet. From that time on the prisoner kept throwing in remarks. The court kept a straight face, though many of those in the court laughed outright.

Rossa gave the oft-told story of how Mrs. Dudley sent for him, saying that she was prepared to help Ireland, via Rossa, with money, and then testified to the shooting. He was often interrupted by the prisoner with such remarks as "You are a liar," "Oh, you old villain." When Rossa was asked whether he said anything when the shot was fired he said he did not.

"Oh, you liar," cried the prisoner. "You said: 'for God's sake don't shoot me.' If we had you in England there would not be a particle left of you."

Under cross-examination by Judge Fullerton, Rossa said that when Mrs. Dudley called on him she complained that the dynamiters were not doing enough desperate work. "She said that if she were going to give money she wanted lives taken. I said I was not in that line of business, and declined to sign a receipt which she offered me, asking that I introduce her to leading friends of Ireland."

"You're a liar!" again exclaimed Mrs. Dudley. "You never read it all; you never went that far." As Rossa was about to resume she cried: "Won't somebody please knock that man out of the window?"

"Do you know of any reason why Mrs. Dudley should not have shot you in the office where she met you?" asked counsel.

"No reason except that I was facing her."

"Do you think that would prevent me?" interposed the prisoner. "When you were shot you fell."

"Yes, my legs were paralyzed," said Rossa.

"With fear—that's all," explained the prisoner, and when the witness was indicating where the bullet struck him she called out: "I want that bullet back again, O'Donovan; it was only lent."

While the Judge was looking at copies of Rossa's paper offered in evidence, the prisoner pointed her long, lavender-gloved finger at the witness and jeered him. "How do you like your own medicine, eh, Rossa?" she said. "I knew you would show the white feather."

Rossa sat twirling a pencil in his hands while the sharp-tongued English matron was speaking. When he was asked what he did during the week that he remained in this country on his second visit Rossa replied:

"I ate, drank, slept and walked about the streets."

"Yes," cried the prisoner, "and murdered people, too, you cur!"

Judge Gildersleeve concluded to admit as evidence a few of the papers, and Mr. Fullerton read from the issue of January 31 an account of the explosions in the House of Parliament and the Tower, with additional comments made by Rossa, who advised that London be set on fire in fifty places at the same time.

"No honest man would advocate such a doctrine as that," said the prisoner.

"You wrote that, did you not?" asked counsel.

"I think I did," said Rossa.

"I think you did, too," said the excited female. "The Irish ought to hang you, for you've done more harm to them than to us."

"I don't think that Mr. Rossa is on trial here," said the Judge; "there seems to be some misunderstanding on that question."

"This fair client of mine is on trial here before this jury, but Rossa is on trial before the world as the real criminal," said Mr. Fullerton.

As Rossa turned to leave the stand the prisoner called out in a mocking voice, leaning over in imitation of Rossa's falling: "Oh, for God's sake, don't shoot me. You are a fine Irishman, you are. God bless the Queen! Down with the dynamiters! Oh, oh, oh."

City Marshal McAuley testified to taking the pistol from Mrs. Dudley and to her saying that she had shot Rossa. The police sergeant testified to the same. This rested the case for the prosecution, and to-day the defense will put Dr. N. E. MacDonald on the stand to say that Mrs. Dudley is flighty and irresponsible.

A Deluge in Mohawk Valley.

CANAJOHARIE, N. Y., June 30.—A destructive rain-storm swept over the Mohawk Valley Sunday afternoon. At Ames, in this township, a cloud-burst occurred at two o'clock with a tremendous report, followed by a flood that carried away small animals, outbuildings, fences, etc., and from which the people narrowly escaped with their lives. Fifty people were attending Sunday-school in the Baptist Church, and the flood was so great that they could not leave for their homes, and were compelled to sleep in the church all night. Great damage was done throughout the valley.

The Obelisk Crumbling.

NEW YORK, June 30.—The statement of Professor Eggleston that the Egyptian obelisk in Central Park is rapidly decomposing is seconded by General di Cesnola. The obelisk is certainly disintegrating, and its destruction is only a matter of time, owing to the sudden changes of temperature for which New York is noted and the action of frost, which chipped the stone. The only remedy he thinks is to have it enclosed. This, he added, could be accomplished by placing it in the large central hall of the Metropolitan Museum of Art, which would involve the building of a stone foundation to cost $40,000.

Buried with Great Honors.

LIMA, Peru, June 30.—The funeral of the late United States Minister Phelps took place on Saturday, and was attended by all the Ministers of State. The tassels of the coffin were held by the aides-de-camp of President Yglesias. The Ministers of Germany, Spain, Chili and the Argentine Confederation attended the obsequies, as did also the commander of the United States ship Shenandoah, from which vessel a delegation of blue jackets followed the coffin. The cortege was composed of an escort from the men-of-war now in Callao, the consular corps, public officials, American residents, and the fire brigades of different nationalities.

SHE WAS INSANE.

A Jury Decides that Mrs. Dudley Was Not Responsible for Her Act of Shooting O'Donovan Rossa.

NEW YORK, July 1.—Mrs. Lucille Yseult Dudley was promptly acquitted yesterday of the charge of attempting to murder O'Donovan Rossa, the jury returning a verdict of not guilty in less than five minutes.

Drs. McDonald and Hardy, experts on insanity, testified that the prisoner was and is insane, and a number of men and women with whom she had been in contact testified the same.

Mrs. Dudley made a scene while Dr. Hardy was testifying, and demanded the right to go on the stand in her own defense. Judge Gildersleeve told her to take the stand, and she immediately began addressing the jury, speaking at a wonderfully rapid rate. She said:

"Gentlemen of the Jury: I may or may not be insane, but it is for you to ascertain whether the shooting of O'Donovan was justifiable or not, and convict or acquit accordingly. When I heard of the dynamite explosions I went to Rossa and he told me that he intended blowing up the House of Parliament, and it was that that made me shoot him. I asked 'How about innocent people?' and he simply laughed and said what were the lives of innocent women and children to the cause of Ireland? He might have been lying when he said he intended blowing up the House of Parliament, as I believe now he was. I could have killed O'Donovan if I wanted to, but he wasn't worth it, and I am glad I spared his life. He lay helpless on the ground, and there was no reason why I could not have killed him if I felt so inclined. I may be homicidal in my impulses, but I'm not of that homicidal character that O'Donovan is—wanting to shed innocent blood. I have no animosity now against O'Donovan. He is not worth having animosity against. He is the most arrant liar and greatest scoundrel that ever breathed. He seems to be a god among the Irish people. He hides himself behind the American flag and blusters about dynamite and the cause, while he dare not go to England or Ireland and preach his doctrines. I would like very much to give a practical illustration on his anatomy of the effects of dynamite. That is all I would ask."

"You intended giving Rossa a subscription," said Lawyer Butts.

"I gave him one," replied Mrs. Dudley.

"What was it?"

"A bullet."

Ten minutes later the jury rendered its verdict, and the prosecution asked that Mrs. Dudley be sent to the State Insane Asylum. Her counsel objected, and asked that she be permitted to return to England and there be placed in an institution. The Court will listen to arguments on this point to-morrow.

SLOWLY PASSING AWAY.

General Grant Daily Growing Weaker—The Doctor's Gloomy Report.

MOUNT MACGREGOR, N. Y., July 1.—General Grant has now been two weeks here, and Dr. Douglas, on being asked as to the general result of the change upon his patient, said:

"His life has been prolonged by the invigorating air here. Had the General remained in New York he would probably have expired before this time, but the disease has progressed in the natural way, and although the change from day to day is scarcely perceptible the aggregate of the fourteen days is noticeable. No one can tell when the end will come. He grows weaker and weaker, and at last the point of exhaustion will be reached. The tongue is now so much swollen as to render articulation difficult and a thorough examination of the mouth impossible."

The patient now evidently lacks ability and desire to walk about the piazza as he did ten days ago, and there is a lessened interest in his literary work. In response to Dr. Douglas' question if he felt better than he did a week ago, the General wrote and signed the following:

"I feel better. The atmosphere here enables me to live in comparative comfort while I am being treated or while nature is taking its course in my disease. I have no idea that I should have been able to come here now if I had remained in the city. It is doubtful, indeed, whether I should have been alive. Now, I would have been much better able to move back than to come at the time I did."

NEW YORK, July 1.—A special to the Telegram from Washington says:

"General Dent, who is General Grant's brother-in-law, said to-day: 'I am afraid that General Grant will not last many days. To-day I received information from the family that the cancer had commenced to inflame the jugular vein, and death is the question of a few days in the opinion of his physicians.'"

A Train Hurled from a Bridge.

ERIE, Pa., July 1.—On the "Nickel-Plate" Railroad at Springfield Monday night a freight train having aboard the wife and two children of Conductor G. Doulan and a Miss Sadie Mahoney, was run into by another freight while on a trestle bridge. The women and children were on a flat car, and were hurled over a precipice ninety-five feet deep. Brakeman Zaney was frightfully injured, and Miss Mahoney was disfigured for life, part of her face being torn away. Mrs. Doulan, who is now dying, was terribly cut by telegraph wires which obstructed her fall. She hung there for some time, still clinging to her baby, which had its arm broken. The wires gave way, and she fell again, but the child was caught in branches and was saved.

Results from the New Postal Laws.

WASHINGTON, July 1.—The revenues of the post-office will be seriously affected by the new legislation contained in the Appropriation bill, which goes into effect to-day. Letters weighing one ounce or less may be sent through the mails for two cents, and the rate on newspapers mailed by publishers will be reduced from two cents to one cent per pound. From the reduction in the newspaper rate a large deficit in revenue is expected to result. In the opinion of the financial officers of the department the new laws will cost the Government at least $10,000,000 during the next fiscal year, and will swell the excess of expenditures over receipts to $6,000,000.

Owned Up After Acquittal.

CINCINNATI, O., July 1.—A singular story is published from Lebanon, Warren County, O., to the effect that Frank Lang, who was twice arrested last year at the instance of J. W. Nixon and S. K. Bradley charged with horse-stealing, and both times acquitted, and who had recently obtained a verdict for $3,000 damages against these men for false imprisonment, has now confessed that he was guilty of stealing the horse as charged by Nixon and Bradley, and that he has been guilty of eight separate crimes of perjury in connection with the lawsuits pertaining to the case.

Another exhibiter, who had fitted up a room with the finest specimens of his art, was horrified to find an old lady eating her lunch of fried chicken seated in one of his satin upholstered chairs. "What's the cheer good for if it ain't to set down in?" she placidly remarked.—N. O. Picayune.

—The increase in value of property in the business section of Boston during the past fifty years is shown in the recent sale of the United States Court-House at the corner of Tremont street and Temple place. The Masons purchased the land in 1830 for $13,000, and in 1832 the Masonic Temple was completed, making a total cost of land and building of $50,000. In 1858 the United States Government bought it for $105,000, and in 1885 sold it for $255,000.—Boston Herald.

The annual picnic of the St. Clair County Pioneer Society occurred at Shady Side Park, near St. Clair, a few days ago.

The cash received at the recent spring fair of the Central Michigan Agricultural Society at Lansing was $2,021.85, against $2,379.01 last year, or an increase in 1885 of $242.84. The premiums paid out this year were $2,284, against $1,950 paid for a similar purpose last year.

The Calumet and Hecla vein, at Calumet, Houghton County, was tapped the other day by the Tamarack shaft at a depth of 2,290 feet, and the result was taken to mean a second copper mine, of equal value with the Calumet and Hecla.

A spotted fawn, about two weeks old, was caught in Wakeshma, Kalamazoo County, a few days since. The inhabitants knew of no runaway deer in that section, and wondered where the fawn came from.

A heavy frost the other night in the western section of Lower Michigan damaged corn and other crops.

A few days ago Mr. L. Charter, of Northville, Wayne County, fed and sheltered a young graduate of the Reform School named Stevenson, while the latter was pretending to look for work. Stevenson repaid the kindness by stealing Charter's horse and selling it at Detroit. The horse was recovered, but the thief had not been captured.

Fire at Duncan City, Cheboygan County, a few days ago burned 500,000 feet of pine lumber and 1,000,000 lath in the dock of Thompson, Smith & Sons.

Al Randall, a farmer living near Bay City, crushed his father's skull with a hoe a few days ago, and fled, with officers in pursuit. Randall, Senior, would die. The crime was said to have resulted from improprieties attempted by the father with the son's wife.

There was a light fall of snow at Monroe Center, Grand Traverse County, the other day.

Traverse City supports the largest livery establishment of any place of its size in the State. It employs from sixty to one hundred horses.

Early the other morning, at South Kalamazoo, the house of William Wagner was destroyed by fire; loss, $3,000; insurance, $2,000.

The recent contest over the will of the late Porter Hackley, of Muskegon, resulted adversely to the plaintiff, Hattie Williams, who claimed to have been the wife of the testator. The estate was valued at $200,000.

Work has been begun on the new Mecosta County court-house, to be erected at Big Rapids.

A fire at Muskegon a few evenings ago destroyed Colle's boarding-house and two houses adjoining owned by H. H. Hays and George D. Farr. Loss between $6,000 and $7,000; partially insured.

The races at Marshall will occur August 4, 5, 6 and 7. Purses of $3,000 will be distributed.

Two drownings occurred in Lake Angeline, near Ishpeming, a few days ago. The first was a young girl, about five years old, named White. She was playing near the lake and fell in. While the lake was being searched for her body a fish-line and pole were found, which being followed up, the body of a boy named Peterson, twelve years old, was discovered.

Rev. J. H. Keeler, of Osgood's Corners, Monroe County, has a Bible printed at Zurich in 1530.

Degrees were recently granted to 348 students of the Michigan University.

Two deaths from drowning occurred in one day recently at Ishpeming. The first was a girl five years old, who fell into Lake Angeline, while playing near the water. The second was a boy named Paterson, twelve years old, who fell into the same lake while fishing.

Kalamazoo merchants have bought over 80,000 pounds of wool this season.

The Comptroller of the Currency recently authorized the American Exchange National Bank of Detroit to begin business; capital, $400,000.

Mollie Sprick, who had been sentenced to a term of three years in the Detroit House of Correction for larceny, hanged herself in the jail at Muskegon a few days ago.

The men in the Detroit mine near Ishpeming struck recently because of a reduction of wages.

In the jail at Houghton there are five insane persons confined. One of them imagines he is the Shah of Persia.

The country store of Gorman & Buck at Bethel, Branch County, was burned the other night, together with all the contents, including the post-office outfit, school inspectors' and supervisors' books. There was no insurance, the policy having expired a short time ago. The loss would amount to $2,000.

The Jackson County Pioneers' Society held its annual picnic a few days ago on the fair grounds at Jackson. Hon. James A. Parkinson delivered the oration. The attendance was very large.

D. A. Convis, of Watertown, Clinton County, was arrested a few days ago, charged with forgery, perjury and obtaining $1,200 by false pretenses.

Willie Lowe, a young son of Charles Lowe, of Vicksburg, Kalamazoo County, stole $130 from a bureau drawer in his father's house a few days ago and ran away. He was arrested on a Michigan Central train, bound west, having spent all but fifty dollars of the money. His father refused to have him locked up.

James Catlin, of West Bay City, who recently secured a judgment of $11,500 for being crushed between cars, will now probably get his money, as the railway's application for a new trial has been denied by the court.

It was expected that 125 United States convicts in the Detroit House of Correction would be freed by a recent Supreme Court decision to the effect that trial for "infamous" crimes can properly be had only after indictment by a Grand Jury. One convict had already been released on this ground.

The Free Masons of the Upper Peninsula held a grand festival at Escanaba, Delta County, a few days ago.

IN THE ORCHARD.

The cattle wander home from the purple clover fields,
Where the bees are drunk with honey and perfume;
And my love trips on behind them, my meadow sweet that yields
Sweeter honey than the clover's purple bloom.

It was here I wooed my love as the Winter wooed the Spring,
In the orchard, when the trees are green and white;
While the birds built nests above us and the daisies blossoming
Filled the air with sweetest fragrance and delight.

It was here I won my love as the glowing sun slid down,
And the red light stole my kisses from her cheek;
And the apple blossoms quivered with an angry glance and frown,
And the jealous robins vowed I should not speak.

In the ripe October days, when the apples change to red,
And the mellow fragrance floats upon the air,
In the swaying, laughing orchard my love and I shall wed,
With the yellow sunset shining through her hair.

The cattle wander home from the purple clover fields,
Where the bees are drunk with honey and perfume,
And my love trips on behind them, my meadow sweet that yields
Sweeter honey than the clover's purple bloom.

A TELL-TALE BLOTTER.

An Odd Story of a London Justice Room.

CHAPTER I.

No doubt there were some in the time of the Queen of Sheba who carped at the wisdom of Solomon; and so there were people in the city in the days that immediately followed the American war who had something to say against the firm of Parkman, Rubb & Parkman, of No. 17 Change-alley. They could not deny that it was an old-established concern, for Parkmans' had been trading between London and Calcutta in almost the early days of John Company Bahadur. And they could not say it was not prosperous, for its name stood high in its own branch of business; and it had never been known to go into rash speculations or risky profits. But what people did say, and there were old fogies on 'Change never tired of repeating it, was, that there was too much young blood in Parkmans'. "Go into Parkmans'," these would say, "and you'll have a young man to deal with, unless you have the luck to do with old Parkman!" treatment which they seemed to think most offensive. And of course when old Parkman died rather suddenly those carpers were still more triumphant. There was no saving clause now, when they stated the treatment you might expect at Parkmans'. For the second partner was only a sleeping partner—sleeping, it was currently reported, on a fine estate in Ross-shire—and young Parkman—well, he was young Parkman. Then Critchlow, the cashier, was young for a cashier, being under forty; and Crisp, the head clerk, was very young, being something over thirty. And altogether Parkmans' might expect, for some time to come, to hear a good deal about its young blood.

It was two o'clock on a Saturday some three weeks after old Mr. Parkman's death. In the large office the clerks were putting away their books and getting down their hats. There was a murmur of talk about the river, or Wimbledon, or whatever amusement they severally had in view for the afternoon, when a tall man, dressed in dark mourning and wearing his hat, entered from an inner room. The noise sank to a respectful hum. He was a handsome man, with a short, fair mustache and light blue eyes. He nodded pleasantly to one or two of the clerks, and walked through to where a glass case in a corner indicated the sanctum of the head clerk. Crisp, a small, slender, dark-complexioned man, looked up peevishly as the chief entered, but seeing who it was would have got down from his stool.

"Sit still," the merchant said, laying his hand lightly on the other's shoulder to stay him. "I am only waiting for the carriage. It is more pleasant here than in the inner office. You are not going about your usual business to-day, I think, Crisp, eh?"

The clerk's face flushed.

"No, Mr. James," he said, "I am not."

"What, haven't you made it up with her yet?"

The younger man shook his head and then broke out suddenly with:

"And what is more, sir, my temper has been so bad ever since Critchlow found out this deficiency that I should be afraid of making matters worse. I don't wonder she could not stand it. It is no good my trying to make it up with her till I have cleared that up. Then I shall be myself again, and can look her in the face. As I told you, sir, I shall come back at four and go through the books quietly by myself. I shall never forget your kindness, sir, never! But that Critchlow is so trying! There's not a clerk in the office does not know now that there is something the matter with my accounts."

Crisp spoke with deep feeling, and it was evident that the other believed him.

"Don't think too much of it!" he said, kindly. "If it can not be explained I shall still trust you. It is but a small amount. Try to hit upon the blot."

"Try!" cried the head clerk; "I've tried again and again."

"Well, do your best," the merchant answered, drawing on his gloves. "You know my poor father had every confidence in you—as he had in your father—and I have the same, Crisp."

And then he went, the young man looking after him with grateful, almost worshiping, eyes. There were few men in his position and at his age so invariably kind and considerate to their inferiors as was James Parkman. Old Parkman had been the same; and father and son enjoyed a rare popularity in the office.

Crisp sat for some moments pondering, and if his face was any index to his thoughts, upon some unpleasant subject. Then he rose and taking his hat went into the outer office. There were still two or three clerks there, detained by some small matters, and talking to them in a sharp, rasping voice was a stout, black-whiskered, short-faced man.

"Not found it out yet?" he said to Crisp, in a sneering tone. He was Critchlow, the cashier.

"No," retorted the head clerk, "nor likely to while there is so much noise in the office!"

"Well, if I were you I'd stay and find out, if I staid until to-morrow. I've got to stay until four or thereabouts, error or no error."

"I think," said Crisp, wrathfully, seeing the clerks upon the broad grin, "that I should make it hot for you if I staid long with you anywhere!"

And without waiting to hear the cashier's retort or the burst of laughter which his own excited answer evoked from the youngsters he passed out and ran down the stairs and through the quiet alley into the street.

CHAPTER II.

It was half-past four when Crisp, after threading divers of the city ways, in which the crowds were now rapidly lessening, turned again into Change-alley. A look of depression—a haggard, careworn look—was upon the young man's face as he crossed it, his head bent down. Suddenly a sweet, glad cry—oh! so out of place there—struck upon his ear, and he stopped and looked round with a start, to meet the next instant two little gloved hands thrust into his, two brown eyes swimming with tears looking into his black ones. "Oh, Earnest!" the girl cried—she was young and pretty, but dressed very plainly in black, and until this moment had worn her veil down—"aren't you glad to see me?"

"Glad, my darling!" he cried, all the care gone out of his face; "yes, very glad. You know I am glad."

"And you do love me as much as ever," she pleaded with her eyes fixed so very anxiously on his.

"Yes," he said, simply. Nor did she doubt him now, though during the last fortnight of estrangement following that wretched petty quarrel she had fancied all sorts of dreadful things. "More and more every day, dearest. It was all my fault, Ethel. I had been worried and vexed by business, and visited it upon you."

The girl looked up at him with clinging eyes, as if it had been a privilege he had granted her. Then she said, but not reproachfully, "I have been here half an hour. I expected you before."

"Did you?" he answered. "It was so good of you to be here, generous of you, like yourself! But you must come in for a minute with me, Ethel. The house is quite empty. The caretaker I know has leave to be away this afternoon, and Critchlow, our cashier, will have left by now."

"I don't think I ought," she said, smiling.

"Nonsense!" he replied gayly. "I must put my books away now, and come back after tea. And see, if you are thinking of the proprieties, there is a policeman watching us with the most unflattering interest."

He opened the door with his key, and she came shyly in, and they went upstairs, his arm round her waist—a strange sight in that dusty place—their steps echoing in the empty house. At the top of the stairs the door into the large clerk's room was ajar. Crisp pushed it open and led her in. "And this is where you do your work?" she asked, devouring with wide open eyes the long bare room, with its four windows, its row of desks and stools along one side and the glass box in the far corner.

"No," he answered, laughing, "I am supposed to be a cut above this, darling. Only I am obliged to be very careful not to throw stones." He led her up the room, and unlocking the door of his glass house, took her in. How delightful it was to help her up on his high stool, and hold her there—for, of course, being unaccustomed to it, she might have become giddy! And see her lift her little boots to the rail of the desk, and unlock the latter and come at once face to face with her own photograph! And then to see her blush, all pleasure at this proof of his fidelity! It was all so delightful that he wondered why, though they had met in Change-alley on Saturday afternoons before, he had never brought her to see his office.

"And where do those doors lead to? Don't, Ernest; please leave my hair alone. How do you know, sir, that there is no one there?"

He stopped at once—whatever he was doing—and a dark shadow fell across his face. "That is Critchlow's room," he said. "And, by Jove, he's left his key in it. There's a nice piece of carelessness!" But there was no elation in his voice. "I'll take the key and convict him at any rate of this," the young man said moodily, and went out of his glass case and crossed the floor to the door. The girl followed him, a strange sudden feeling of the emptiness of the house upon her.

Crisp, after trying the cashier's door and finding it locked, slipped the key out and put it into his pocket. Then he locked his own door and pocketed that key also. It was strange, perhaps, that he took no farewell kiss in the hall, but opened the outer door hastily, and seemed to breathe more freely when they were out of the alley and in the peopled street.

They took so long a walk, Ethel telling her lover of her latest troubles at Maintree House, a young ladies' seminary where she was tolerated as teacher of English, and Ernest confiding the dreadful matter of the error in his accounts, that when they parted he gave up all thought of returning to his books.

"But you must not be late another day, sir," were her last words. He thought nothing of them then, but afterward when he was alone, they puzzled him. There had been no appointment made for that afternoon, no promise given, no time fixed. So how could he have been late? It was odd. What did she mean by saying he was late?

CHAPTER III.

Crisp's omission to return to the books may have blunted his moral sense; or it may have been mere chance that led him to be nearly a quarter of an hour late on Monday morning. As he hurried up the alley he was surprised by the sight of a group collected about Parkmans' door. Among them were one or two of Parkmans' clerks looking unlike themselves, and one or two policemen unable to look anything but themselves.

"What is up?" he asked, lightly; but though they all seemed to be looking at him, no one answered. Instead, a clerk, one of the juniors, said and ran: "That is Mr. Crisp!" and a strange voice answered, emphatically: "That is the man!" This seemed to cause a sensation, amid which a short, stout person, with a blunt hearty voice and a humorous eye pushed through the group, and said: "This way, sir, please," in a voice of authority.

"What in the world is the matter?" asked Crisp.

"Tell you in a moment, sir. Please to step with me up to Mr. Parkman's room." And he took Crisp by the arm, in what the latter thought an odd fashion, and so led him up, and swiftly through the clerk's office, which was half full of staring gapers, and into the junior partner's room.

Crisp looked round him in utter bewilderment. On the hearth rug stood Mr. Parkman, pale and agitated. By the window two gentlemen were talking. At the table, apparently making some notes, sat a police officer.

"Watson," said his conductor, shutting the door firmly behind them, "do you take him?" and fell back into a corner of the room where he seemed to busy himself with an old Joe Miller so very facetious that it rendered him oblivious to all going on around him.

While Crisp stood looking from one to the other the superintendent rose abruptly and stepped to him. "Mine is a painful business, sir; you are Mr. Ernest Crisp, I think?"

It darted into Crisp's mind that the chief had put the police in motion in the matter of that little discrepancy in his accounts; but a single glance at Mr. Parkman's pale, sympathizing face sufficed to dispose of that. "Yes," he said, "I am. That is my name."

"You may or may not know, then, that a great crime was committed here on Saturday afternoon. The cashier, Mr. Critchlow, has been found dead in his office, stabbed to the heart from behind."

"Mr. Critchlow?" the head clerk whispered, with white, shaking lips.

"And you have been identified as the person last seen to leave the house. I'm sorry to say I must take you into custody on suspicion; I must warn you, too, Mr. Crisp, that anything you say will be given in evidence against you."

"On Saturday afternoon?" Crisp muttered in awed accents, looking around him with eyes that did not see. "But what—why am I suspected?"

"All that you will hear at the Mansion House. I am anxious to take you there at once, and with as little unpleasantness to yourself as possible."

"It is a mere formality, Crisp," Mr. Parkman volunteered, speaking for the first time, with earnest kindness. "I will attend myself and say how perfectly ridiculous your conduct for years makes this charge appear." The color came back to the clerk's face. "Thank you, sir," he said.

"Perhaps you will let yourself be searched here?" asked the policeman. Crisp nodded acquiescence, and did not flinch when the operation began. But the first articles to appear were two keys. The policeman looked carelessly at the first; but his face lit up wonderfully as he held up the second.

"This is the missing key!" he exclaimed, and a thrill of intelligence seemed to pass round the room.

"That key," said Crisp, still bewildered and grappling with the memory of things which seemed to have happened so long ago, "that is the key of Mr. Critch—," he stopped with trembling lips. He had gone so far unthinking, and then his position in all its bearings flashed across his mind. He remembered all that the presence of that key upon him, all that the words he had uttered, might mean for him. The room began to go round; visions of Ethel and Mr. Critchlow swam before his eyes. Amid an appalling silence, which had greeted his words, he fell to the floor in a dead faint.

Five minutes later the room was cleared of all save the owner and the short, stout man. "I can not believe it now," Mr. Parkman was saying, "and yet the key!—the key! How can he explain that? How can he explain that?"

"You remember, sir, I told you it was a pretty clear case?" answered the detective—for such he was and a well known one.

"You did, and I did not believe you," the merchant answered, with a groan. He was very greatly distressed, and no wonder.

"Well, sir, I'm inclined to think that you were right and I was wrong," the other answered, dryly.

"Eh! less clear now, inspector? But the key?"

"It is the key and another matter or two that puzzle me," the man answered thoughtfully. "You've read, I dare say, of murderers doing stupid things, sir? There was that nurse who strangled her patient and then could not refrain from laying her out? Yes, quite so. But I never heard of a murderer carrying a proof against himself in his pocket, and that proof a thing he had no motive for keeping and every chance to get rid of!"

It almost seemed as if the merchant in his interest in the puzzle thus presented to him forgot his anxiety on behalf of his poor clerk. "But," he suggested, "it was very likely sheer carelessness. Its discovery you can see was a terrible shock to him."

"Quite true, sir," the detective said. "And the female who, if the policeman is to be believed, was with him—if we could get a clue to her she might clear it all up."

"I hope she may," the man answered, coolly, "for I have not only got the clue to her; I shall see her to-day. I don't think there can be any imprudence in showing you this." He took from a large pocket-book which he produced a tiny newspaper cutting. Mr. Parkham looked at it with a face of great amazement. It read thus:

"Dl vgsvo nzrmgivv sfhv artstgv nvvg nv wvziwhg zg 17 xszmtv zoovb zg ulfi glnliild yb gszg grnv rdloo szev irw nbhvou lu lfi dlihg vmvnb blfi olermt vimvhg."

"But this is gibberish!" the merchant said after turning it over.

"No, not gibberish!" the detective answered, wondering that such a man should know so little of such a subject, "only a cipher, and the easiest that exists. It's merely a transposition of the alphabet; Z is A, Y is B, and so on. But here is my translation. I may add that the advertisement appeared in the Standard of last Friday, sir."

The translation ran as follows:

To Ethel, Maintree House, Highgate: Meet me, dearest, at No. 17 Change-alley, at four to-morrow. By that time I will have rid myself of our worst enemy. Your loving ERNEST.

"Good heavens!" cried the merchant, pale with excitement. "He is lost!" This is almost conclusive evidence. I don't know—good heavens!—I don't know what can be said to this."

"Umph!" the detective said. "This advertisement is another thing which I had not when I gave you my opinion this morning." He said it meaningly, and paused as if expecting to be questioned. But Mr. Parkman had not marked the drift of his last words and let them pass unchallenged.

Shortly afterward the merchant, pale but collected, had to be present at the Lord Mayor's inquiry at the justice room of the Mansion House. We need not attend him, further, for only such evidence was taken as would justify a remand, and the reader can guess what that was. The policeman was examined who had seen Crisp go into the house on the Saturday afternoon, and had likewise seen him leave it a little later, each time in company with a lady. Then the Superintendent of Police produced the key found upon the prisoner, and proved that it was the key of Mr. Critchlow's office, the door of which was found locked upon the outside. And two of Parkmans' clerks reluctantly described the bad terms upon which the prisoner and deceased were, and the quasi threat with which the former had left Critchlow upon the last occasion when the cashier was—so far as could be proved—seen alive by any one except the murderer. This amply sufficed; and Ernest Crisp, clerk, was formally remanded—bail being, of course, refused—until the following Thursday, upon the charge of willful murder. The inquest, opened the same day, was adjourned to await the result of the magisterial inquiry.

CHAPTER IV.

"A clergyman to see Miss Maunder? I will see him first myself," said Miss Maintree, in her stiffest tone. She was the principal of the Maintree House Seminary.

She was absent from the school-room ten minutes. The girls looked curiously at Ethel, and the latter wondered who it could be. She knew of no clergyman likely to visit her, and was surprised by the gracious permission to go to the drawing-room which Miss Maintree presently vouchsafed her.

"You wished to see me?" Ethel said, surprised at confronting a short, portly clergyman, who was a complete stranger to her.

"I do. You look a sensible young lady, and I will tell you right out who I am and what I want. Please dont faint or scream, or all my trouble expended in making things comfortable for you will be thrown away. My name is Peters—I am a detective officer. You know a gentleman called Crisp—I see you do. Are engaged to marry him? Just so. Well, he has been charged—but there, read that, please, and pray be as calm as you can." And he put into her hand an early Globe, pointing out the report of the proceedings at the Mansion House. "Pray be as calm as you can!"

She went white to the lips as she read, but, save one faint cry when its meaning broke upon her, gave no sign of the demonstrations so much dreaded by the detective.

"Now, I am quite aware, Miss, that you were the lady who was with the accused. If you are implicated"—he did not think after a glance at her face that she was—"you had best say nothing. But if the young man is innocent you take it very coolly, Miss!"

"And why not?" she cried, indignantly. "Why should I be troubled because a false charge is brought against him. Why"—But then her voice broke, and she cried piteously: "Oh, tell me, sir, how can I help him?"

"First, Miss, by telling me all you did on Saturday." The girl did so, and he took note of it. "Quite so," he said when he had heard all, "but may I ask if you met by appointment?"

She colored. "I had a message from him on the Friday morning."

"Verbal or written?"

"Neither. I can not receive letters here, so when Earnest could take me out on Saturday—his and my half holiday—he would put an advertisement in Friday's Standard. It was foolish, perhaps, but Earnest had a fancy to put it in cipher, and I, well—" with a bright blush—"I liked it because it took me longer to read the message."

"Just so! You'll forgive me saying that now I know you are telling me the truth. So will you please explain what that ugly little bit means?" He handed to her the slip he had shown to Mr. Parkman, and pointed out the words: "I will have rid myself of our worst enemy."

"Yes. We had a silly quarrel. I told him—oh, how could I?—that his temper was his worst enemy and mine. He meant that as—I mean he wished to apologize and make it up."

"One more question, young lady. What should you say if I told you that Mr. Crisp denied on his way to the Mansion House, this morning, being the author of that?"

"Say!" She cried, fiercely. "I should say I believed him! But still it surprises me. This message begins and ends as his always did. Yet I remember that I thought it odd that he made no reference to this message on Saturday. And it was strange that though he was half an hour after the appointed time he did not seem aware of it—or say he was sorry."

Peters sat thinking deeply. "It's a cipher a child could read," he murmured to himself. "And any one reading previous advertisements could have identified the Ernest very likely. Is it possible that some one having learned, no matter how, his habit of corresponding with this girl, has done this to divert suspicion from himself? Unlikely; but still possible. Do you know, Miss," he continued aloud—"of any one being acquainted with these cipher messages?"

"Not through me," she answered quickly. "But I remember Ernest saying that young Mr. Parkman knew all about me, and had been very kind. But he can not have anything to do with it."

"No," the detective answered, briskly, "but he may have told some one else. I must go to Richmond to-morrow, or as soon as I can, and ask him. We will lose no time," he added cheerily. "Your young gentleman shall be free in a day or two. And I hope that then he will teach you a better cipher, Miss—or get rid of any necessity for using one."

On the tram car Peters said to himself: "Wanted some one with two things. Firstly, a motive for murdering Critchlow, and secondly, a knowledge, however gained, of the relations between Crisp and this very nice girl. By gad, that is a new idea! Could it be that Critchlow tracked the girl and tried to decoy her there with this bogus message, and was found out and killed by the jealous lover before the girl came? I must consider that. That is a new idea!"

CHAPTER V.

"Are you engaged to marry the accused?"

This was not the first question put to the witness, but it was the first that promised to afford the spectators, who occupied every inch of the floor in the justice room, the slightest return for the trouble they had taken. The city were talking of nothing but the Critchlow tragedy; and even in Cheapside the excitement was plainly visible. It was rumored that the matter was now as clear as the murder was diabolical, and that the young man would certainly be committed for trial today. Among the persons admitted as and scanned and sketched by the crowd in that close green-painted court with its one window and the skylight, was Mr. Parkman; and close observers noted that his eyes would now and again turn from wandering over the court to cast a look of anxiety, of expectation, almost of dread, toward the door.

But listen. The witness has answered the question bravely: "I am."

"And he was in the habit of communicating with you by cipher advertisements similar to the one I produce?"

"He was."

"Did he communicate with you by an advertisement appearing in the Standard on the Friday before the murder?"

"He did not."

"Were you," said the counsel, smiling, "under the impression, last Saturday, that the advertisement emanated from him?"

"I was. But you must let me explain," with great steadiness she stated her reasons for so thinking, and what she had understood the message to mean, and why she did not think Ernest the author of it. This caused a great sensation. The strange cipher advertisement was a fact quite new to the general public.

"Do I understand you to think then, Miss Maunder, that the person, whoever he was, who inserted this advertisement was also the murderer?"

"I don't know," she faltered. Then, with courage: "Yes, I do think so."

He smiled calmly as he looked round. It was evident he thought nothing of the girl's theory, but believed Crisp to be both author and murderer. Others in court also smiled and shook their heads. Her idea was too complex and far fetched for them. They could not swallow it, in vulgar phrase.

She was taken then through the events of the Saturday afternoon, and examined particularly as to the prisoner's statements about the deceased. Afterward the solicitor for the defense, well known to be employed by Mr. Parkham, drew from her all that might tell in the prisoner's favor, and then, casting one long, loving look of comfort at her lover, Ethel sat down. She had told the truth; she had perfect trust now in the wisdom of the law.

Two or three unimportant witnesses followed, the medical evidence succeeded these, and then Mr. Parkman was called. As he took off his glove many sympathizing glances were cast at his handsome figure and grave face. What a trouble and annoyance it must have been to him! What a loss to be deprived of his two chief employes at once! And then how rich he was said to be, and almost fashionable, too, for was he not going to be married to the Hon. Sylvestra Hanthan!

"The prisoner has been a clerk in the employment of your firm for nearly fourteen years, Mr. Parkman?" That was the first question of any interest.

"He has. He has been a most faithful, steady and upright man in all of his dealings with us."

Mr. Parkman then went on to tell what he knew of the differences between Critchlow and the prisoner, and the unfriendly mention of the cashier which Crisp had made in their last conversation. But he told this so reluctantly that the examining barrister was struck by his bias in the prisoner's favor, and asked him with a smile: "And do you, too, think that the same person inserted the advertisement and committed the murder?"

The witness paused. It was clear that he had no doubt that his protege was guilty of the one and the other, for he faltered and passed his hand over his brow. Then he said: "I do."

"And so do I," said the counsel, dryly, and was about to sit down with that quip in his mouth, when there was a bustle at the door. Some glanced that way impatiently, and some expectantly; what was the expression of Mr. Parkman's face it was hard to say. It was almost a baffled, hunted look that came into his light blue eyes, and the hand which he raised to stroke his mustache scarcely hid an odd contraction of the mouth. The noise ceased as a burly man pushed his way through the crowd to the table. He seemed to be some one of importance, for the counsel paused in the act of sitting down, and lent a willing ear to his whisper. Then a hurried and seemingly exciting conference went on between these two and the solicitor for the defense and one or two others—so exciting that expectation was raised to a very high pitch, and at length the Lord Mayor, unable to bear it longer said: "Have you any more questions for this witness, Mr. Bauckworth?"

Thus recalled to himself, Mr. Bauckworth rose from his stooping position and seemed to hesitate. Finally he said, with an air of reluctance: "Yes, my lord, I fear I have. Mr. Parkman, did I understand you to give it as your opinion that whoever inserted that advertisement committed this murder?"

A strange pause, then, in an equally strange, hoarse tone: "Yes."

"Is that," holding up a Russian leather blotting case filled with green blotting paper, "the blotting case you use in your library at Richmond?"

It sounded, apart from the sudden production of the case, a harmless question enough. And yet now was it that through all that crowded court every one felt the terrible nature of the silence which followed. Was that not very clothing ... gorgon's head, that at sight of it the perspiration should spring in great beads to the witness' forehead, and his mouth should writhe in a vain attempt to speak? He couldn't. He couldn't. In the end he only nodded.

"Then can you explain," the lawyer asked solemnly, "how it happens that on a page of this blotting paper there appears in printed characters a reverse impression of the latter part of this advertisement?"

The crisis had come, the worst had happened; and yet—even now some cool, plausible reason might avail him. Now was the time for ready brain and steady pulse. Now—but now all these were wanting! He glared around him for a moment on the sea of faces, grasped wildly at his throat, and fell to the floor of the box in a fit.

Amid a thrill of such sensation as few in that court had ever experienced they bore him out to an adjoining room. But he was dead before they could bring a doctor to him. That moment—and Heaven knows what of bitter anticipation—had been his punishment in this world.

Peters, it appeared, had gone down to see him at Richmond, and while waiting in the library had, in the instinctive pursuit of his profession, turned over the leaves of the blotting book. The cipher caught his eye, but the merchant entering at that moment, it was not until he left for town that Peters could get into the house again, confirm his impression, and with his strange piece of evidence follow to London by a later train.

For a few hours after the merchant's death it seemed one of those motiveless murders that upset all calculations. But among his papers was found the key. He had lost great sums by deep play at a West End club. His father was then ill, his needs were most pressing. He had already far exceeded his right to draw upon the firm; to get more he deposited forged acceptances. At his father's death the cashier discovered this, and though the junior partner was now able to refund the money, Critchlow held the forgeries in terrorem over him. Parkman, secretive yet fierce, took his life.

Of him enough. For Ernest Crisp, he married Ethel three weeks later, and there are already three small Crisps in the nursery, with whom this strange story of the Mansion House justice room will some day be a household word, and be in their mouths, as it is in those of the justice-room officials, "often remembered."—London Society.

"O, yes, Miss Ethel," he answered, "and it comes so easily to me. Why, do you know, I expect it is more work for you to read my poems than it is for me to write them?" "Yes, I expect it is," she answered, coyly, "and it must be so much pleasanter to write them than to read them." And then he looked up at the shrubs that grew around them and said nothing, while she continued to toy with the chilly, orange-flavored ice.—Boston Post.

PLAYING HOOKEY.

A School Principal Dilates on the Science of Truancy.

The boy who never played hookey during his school-days is hard to find, for the reason that somehow or another the goody-goody boys all the young and the teachers' pets never seem to pan out into anything remarkable. If they do they generally become ashamed of themselves and recite wonderful stories of their juvenile depravity. A school principal, who had a few hours' leisure Saturday afternoon, entertained a reporter with some remarks on truancy in the schools. He said: "Truancy, or absence of a scholar from school without permission of the principal or knowledge of parents, exists to an alarming extent in the schools. We have lots of cases of playing hookey during the circus season, and when the time comes around for swimming. The boys tire of school about April, and from that time until school closes in June, we have the most trouble. The boys don't play truant in winter."

"What's the worst case of truancy you have come across?" asked the reporter.

"About the worst was the case of a boy who staid away from school for 170 consecutive days without the knowledge of his parents. Now when a boy is absent three days his name is dropped from the rolls. If he can manage to stop the notice sent to his parents he stays away all the year, and has what he calls a picnic, making demands for money to purchase books and spending it in lordly revel after a boy's fashion. Most of the truants stay away for a day and come back with some excuse. I tell you the Board of Health doesn't know of the enormous amount of sickness in this city. The truants report an awful amount. Every time they come back they come with a story that they are sick, and in some instances the whole family was sick. They very often have to go to funerals, and one boy came once at my school and said that his absence was caused by his folks moving. The boys often wait outside the school yard until the gates are closed, and then go home and indignantly tell fond mothers that the road to learning has been closed up. The boys nowadays early adopt forgery as a means of escaping detection. A boy procures a note from his father or mother on an occasion of legitimate absence and gets the form. Some of them copy the signature pretty well. We generally catch them."

"What punishment do you inflict?"

"The rattan is about the best thing to apply to the truant. He is generally a manly fellow, and when given to understand that he has to take a whipping takes it in a manner that makes him the pride of his fellows. A boy, nowadays, who cries under the rattan is set down as a baby. Moral suasion has a good deal of force. Of course they don't all reform, but the incorrigible we get rid of."

"Do girls play truant?"

"Occasionally they play truant to go to a picnic, but they never miss more than an afternoon. You see, the girls can't run about the streets like the boys and they have no inducement to play truant. We punish the girls by notifying their parents and giving them a talking to ourselves."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

—"Have you got any bread?" said a tramp to a housewife in the country. "No." "Have you got any bacon?" "No." "Have you got any cheese?" "No." "What in thunder have you got, anyway?" "I've got this," she said, and she took down a revolver and put it to his nose. He left.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—Angle worms, fish, etc., are often caught up into the clouds by revolving storms, and then dropped again many miles from the place where they were taken up. READING FOR THE YOUNG.

FIVE LITTLE WHITE HEADS.

Five little white heads peeped out of the mold
When the dew was damp and the night was cold,
And they crowded their way through the soil with pride;
"Hurrah! We are going to be mushrooms!" they cried.

But the sun came up, and the sun shone down,
And the little white heads were shriveled and brown;
Long were their faces, their pride had a fall—
They were nothing but toad stools, after all.

—Walter Learned, in St. Nicholas.

A CHAPTER ON GOOD MANNERS.

A Few Rules for Boys, Which They Will Do Well to Read and Practice.

Some boys think it effeminate and affected to be polite and considerate to others.

Now everybody likes heartiness in a boy; but is it not possible for a boy to be open and hearty and manly and have well-bred manners also? I, for one, do not see why it is not. In fact, some of the most agreeable boys I have ever met have had very good manners indeed, but they were just as manly, just as full of spirits, just as fond of sport, just as genuine boys, as many of their companions who were not nearly so well-bred. Let me ask if a boy is any more a manly boy because he crams his mouth full when he is eating? Is he likely to play a better hand at base ball because he sits at dinner with his elbows on the table?

But what are good manners? All of us know something as to what they are. We all know and practice some of the rules of good breeding. The most of us are not as bad as we might be—there is some comfort in that. I have seen boys jostle people on the sidewalk very rudely, but I have never seen a boy so rude that he would intentionally run against an infirm old lady.

Now don't imagine that good manners make one stiff, or that they make one uncomfortable, like a badly fitting coat. Good manners may be just as natural as bad manners, just as easy and matter-of-course as speaking or laughing. This is the sort of good manners that we ought to have, so that it would be just as easy for us to do the right thing as it would be to do the wrong thing. We must make our good manners our second nature; and they will become anybody's second nature, if one will take care to practice them. Let one observe all the rules carefully for a time, and by and by one will observe the rules without stopping to think about them. In fact, it will become just as easy to be polite as to play or work.

There are a good many rules of good manners, what one must not do and what one must do, but it seems to me that the most important of all the rules is to be kind-hearted. The boy who does kindly things may make a few mistakes in little matters, but everybody will like and respect him. The kind-hearted boy who picks up a hat that an old gentleman has dropped has done a polite thing, as well as a kind-hearted thing. And the boy who takes the trouble to show a lady the right way to go has also done a polite as well as a kind-hearted thing.

But a boy may have a kind heart and the best intentions in the world, and yet forget to do some things that he ought to do, or do things that he ought not to do. He may, for instance, have a kind heart, and forget to take off his hat to ladies; or he may have a kind heart, and not know that he should not whistle in the presence of his elders, or drum on a seat or the wall, or beat with his feet on the floor, or make noises of any kind when other people are by.

There are some very pleasant observances that one should never forget, and which are an essential part of good manners. Don't forget every morning to salute all the members of the family with "good-morning," and at night upon retiring "good-night." Good-night and good-morning are very pleasant things to hear, and young people should never omit them.

When you enter your school room, say "good-morning" to the teacher, and "good evening" when you leave in the afternoon.

Never burst boisterously into a room under any circumstances. Enter quietly, and if there is company there, salute them with a polite bow and a "good-day" or "good-morning." You need not shake hands with the visitors, unless they first offer to do so.

Never interrupt people when they are talking. It is not right for young people to force themselves into a conversation going on between older people. Respond promptly to any question that may be asked and if you happen to know anything special about a subject under discussion you may say "Pardon me," or "Excuse me," Mr. Brown, (or whatever the name may be), but—and go on to say what you have to say, if there is a willingness shown to listen to you.

Don't lounge. Stretching one's self on the sofa or lolling on the chairs is very bad breeding. Never sit with your chair tipped back. This is very vulgar.

Don't be fidgety. Don't keep in company play with the curtains, or the tassels, or with anything else. Don't twirl a chair, or play with the door, or keep up a continual restlessness. One necessary thing in good manners is to be quiet and self restrained when in the presence of other people.

Don't shout every time you want to speak, whether indoors or out. Some boys fairly shout at play-fellows who are only a few feet off and who could hear without difficulty everything spoken in an ordinary voice.

Never fail in the school room to be respectful to the master, kind to the small boys and diligent in your studies. Don't worry your school-fellows with tricks. Study hard when you are studying; play hard when you are playing. Be always open, cordial, honest, manly; never do a mean thing or a sneaking thing.

There is no place where bad manners are so disagreeable as at the table, and hence society has agreed upon a number of rules that must be observed in order to make meal times as sociable and agreeable as possible. Let us see what these rules are.

In the first place, don't take your seat at the table before the others do. Ladies should always be allowed to take their seats first, and boys should wait until the rest are seated, or preparing to seat themselves.

Don't, when you are seated, begin to drum on the table, or make disturbances of any kind. Don't begin to handle your knife or fork, or to play with the goblets, or with any article. Don't touch anything until you have occasion to use it.

You must not lean on the table, or put your elbows on the table, or stretch yourself across the table. Any act of this kind is very vulgar.

Don't be greedily anxious for your time to come to be served. The ladies must be served first, and then every one else older than you are. The youngest must come last, but girls should always be served before boys. All through life you must always give the female sex preference to your own. This is a social privilege granted to them throughout the civilized world.

If you have soup, don't drop your head down to the dish in order to reach it, and don't make a disagreeable gurgling when you are eating it. You must learn to eat soup quietly and neatly. You can do so if you try.

When you get your plate of meat don't plunge into it as if you never saw food before, and as if you were afraid somebody would run off with it. There is almost always plenty of time for one's meals. Remember that haste is not good manners. Eat slowly and noiselessly. Take small mouthfuls, and masticate well.

When cutting your meat don't thrust your elbows out. Keep them close to your side. If every one at table were to thrust his elbows into the sides of his neighbors how uncomfortable it would be to sit at table! Be sure never to discommode any one; this is a good rule to observe at all times and in all places.

Of course you will not eat with your knife. People in old times, when the two-tined fork was in general use, ate with their knives, but it is now considered vulgar to do so. Take up your meat and vegetables with your fork always, and don't take up too much at a time. There is no need of ever over-crowding your fork or of packing your mouth full of food, and it shows great want of good taste and good manners to do so.

You must not put bits of bones or other substances back into your plate. If you have taken something into your mouth that you can not swallow eject it quietly upon your fork, and place it at the side of your plate. When eating cherries or grapes remove the stones from your mouth neatly with your fingers. Don't put them into the plate as I have frequently seen persons do.

When you want anything, do not stretch across your neighbor's plate in order to reach it. Politely ask for it, either of the servant, or of one near it. Do not put your knife into the butter, or the salt-cellar, or into any dish. When you have occasion to drink, do not turn your goblet or cup upside down and pour its contents into your mouth. Learn to drink neatly, a little at a time, and be sure not to gurgle when you drink.

These are some of the rules of good manners at table, and no doubt you have heard them often before. Have you remembered to observe them? If not, begin to practice them, and study to eat in a neat, quiet and agreeable manner.

In addition to all these things, I must urge you to be neat in all matters about your person. Keep your hands and your finger-nails clean. Let your morning ablutions be thorough. Cleanse your teeth, wash out your ears; be neat in everything. Everybody delights to see a fresh, cleanly, well-mannered boy. Why should not all boys be cleanly, fresh-looking and well-mannered?—G. D. Bunce, in Youth's Companion.

OUR TALENTS.

"Honor and shame from no condition rise, Act well your part, there all the honor lies."
—Pope.

Do I hear some one say: "I have no talent." How can that be? Young, middle-aged and old, all have some talent, and some niche in which they can be of use. The positions of trust in business and the high rank in scholarship will not come without the exercise of our individual energy in little things. Our talents may never be equal to those of a lawyer, inventor, physician or engineer, but every one of us is capable of doing some good with what we possess. If, therefore, none of us can exercise or display any great talents, we must not give up, and say, "Oh, well, what is the use of trying?"

Let us look a little more closely into the matter. Some of you are fond of reading, some of mechanical pursuits, and mending, some of drawing or writing. Now what are you to do with these prominent likings? Those of you who love to read, have you ever thought how much pleasure you could afford by reading to others? Mother and sisters would like it as well as yourself. If, however, at night they are unable to read for themselves, could you not find time to read aloud one evening, or every evening for a short time? Are there not some invalid friends who would be grateful to you for whiling away an hour in reading to them? I know it is not always an easy task, but it gives you a chance to exercise your talent, and it is one of the little things which require individual energy. A year would pass quickly, and a stated course of reading, even one half-hour every evening, would give comfort to many and materially enlarge your stock of knowledge. The thought that you have helped to make others happy and been energetic in looking after one of the many little things that make up life's grand total will be reward enough now.

Then those of you who are fond of mechanical pursuits must not let your fondness degenerate into a selfish use. Mother's chair may need mending, or the knob may be off the door, and a thousand and one little things need attention. If you can do it and be of service as a saver of time and money, it should be a pleasure to exercise your talent. I know "it is only a little thing," but some one has to attend to it, and if you can do it best, then it should be your duty to gladly remedy the evil.

Then you who want to draw and write, it may not be your lot in life to be artists or authors. If you have any moderate degree of talent, however, in either line, you can always be of service to some one, and what can you ask more than to be a help to others? In thus helping your friends you do what they can not do as well, save them annoyance, and make a life that is, at the end, as great as that of any distinguished man or woman.

We must think more of these little things, and in time our life will acquire a serenity which only comes when we are doing our duty.

It is easy to commence but hard to continue, therefore we should, each one of us, be determined to be individually energetic in the little things of life, and learn to so economize time that there will be room for all. Give up the idea of looking for great deeds, and push on in the good work nearest to us, remembering that whatsoever our hands find to do, to do that heartily and with might.—C. H. Howard, in Christian at Work.

"IMPOSED UPON."

President Cleveland's Request for the Resignation of the Copiah County Murderer Unheeded.

It will be remembered that a few weeks ago the President appointed Meade, one of the instigators of the Copiah County, Miss., outrages, to be postmaster at Hazelhurst, Miss. It was then discovered that the President had been "imposed upon," and a letter was written to Meade asking that he resign. This prompt action on the part of Mr. Cleveland was received with general approval by the best men of all political parties who did not believe that a murderer should be rewarded for his crime. For a few days nothing was heard of the matter. Mr. Cleveland was credited with saying that he "drew the line at murder," and it was supposed that Meade would be promptly removed. The fact is, however, that Meade still holds his office in defiance of the President's request. It is perhaps unjust to severely criticise the President as yet, in view of his promptness in calling for Meade's resignation, but if the Mississippi Ku-Klux is permitted to hold his office it must be regarded as an indication that the Administration wishes to recognize his bloody services to the Democratic party, or that it stands in fear of the spirit that dictated the brutal outrages that have made Copiah County a synonym for everything outrageous and disgraceful.

As might be expected, the Democratic press of Mississippi is up in arms against the request of the President for Meade's resignation. The Democratic State organ, the Jackson Clarion, announces that the request is "an indictment of the whole people." Perhaps it is and perhaps it is not. It is an indictment only upon those who thus choose to assume the hateful burden of responsibility. Respectable Democrats everywhere approved the President's request for the resignation of Meade. Only those who were in sympathy with his foul deed could wish to see him appointed to office. Let it be called an indictment of that class if they choose to so regard it.

Again, the Vicksburg Post says:

> Mr. Meade and his compatriots contributed greatly to Cleveland's success in Copiah County, and, if the electoral vote of the State had hinged upon the vote of one county, no doubt Mr. Cleveland's partisans in Copiah would have been found equal to the emergency.

Here is the milk in the cocoanut. The Post is very truthful and candid indeed. There is no doubt of the truth of its statement. But what a shameful admission to make! The situation is practically this: The Democratic press of Mississippi admits that Copiah County was carried for the Democrats by methods which would disgrace the age of barbarism. "Mr. Meade and his compatriots" are given the credit and every well-informed man, woman and child in the country knows that the result was attained through murder and intimidation. Knowing this, the Mississippi Democracy boldly demands that Meade be retained in office upon the ground that he has rendered valuable services to Mr. Cleveland! Will the President accept this construction? Will he recognize services that are stained with the blood of a man whose only crime was that he was a Republican? Will he set up a standard for men to follow in the hope of gaining political reward, the policy of bulldozing, intimidation, fraud and even murder? If Mr. Cleveland retains Meade in office this is just what the action will mean. It will fix the status of the Administration upon a plane so low that its every respectable supporter must blush for shame.

It is not reviving sectionalism to call for the prompt removal of Meade. It is not "waving the bloody shirt." It is simply asking that justice may be done, that the fair fame of the Nation shall not be sullied by the appointment of a red handed murderer to office as a reward for political service in which the murder of an innocent husband and father was the chief feature. It is to be hoped that there are few Democrats and Democratic newspapers that will accept and indorse the policy upon which the Mississippi papers ask for Meade's continuance in office. If they do, but one construction can be placed upon the motives of the Administration and the Democratic party, a construction that calls loudly for retribution. The President may well "draw the line at murder," but it is important that he draw it upon the right side. The case is one that calls for immediate action. —Burlington Hawkeye.

LAMAR'S "ECONOMY."

An Intricate Problem Solved, after an Expensive Experience.

One of the first official acts of Secretary Lamar was to sell the horses and carriages belonging to the Interior Department. There was some objection to this on the part of the chiefs of bureaus, as it compelled them to transact their business on foot. The Secretary was obdurate, however, and the stables were sold out. The net result in cash was a little over $6,000, and it was in this manner that Mr. Lamar's department began the work of retrenchment.

The Secretary was always an enthusiastic pedestrian, and for a week the Secretary was observed to be stalking with rapid strides through the streets. Then, one day, he left the department in a clandestine manner and got into a street car. He took out a fifty-cent piece and dropped it into the box. After that he was often seen on the street cars and herdic lines, and one day rode five times, expending a quarter for the same.

When the Cabinet met a few weeks ago he astonished the officials at the White House by appearing in a herdic. The Cabinet meeting lasted two hours. His herdic bill was $2.50. He often came after that in a herdic, and once in a carriage. Of late, however, the Secretary has assumed a thoughtful and wistful look when gazing at the carriages of his confreres. Then he looked in his journal to ascertain the cost of street-car and carriage fare. Here are the contents, as given by a gentleman whose friend was in the next room when the inspection was made. The figures bear internal evidence of approximate accuracy:

To street car, herdic cab and carriage fare in moving about city for month of April	$17.65
Ditto for month of May	36.13
Ditto for month of June, to 15th	28.62
To money put in box by mistake	7.20
To physician for attendance while suffering from chills brought on by exposure	80.00
Total	$169.65

Then the Secretary determined to have a carriage of his own. So when he appeared at the White House on Tuesday he was seated in a new buggy and drawn by a horse of the most pronounced seal-brown color. The horse is fifteen and one-half hands high and of uncertain age. The bones of the animal are as prominent as its color. The outfit cost about $200. The Secretary took a ride in it yesterday. —Washington Republican.

THE OFFICIAL GUILLOTINE.

Mr. Cleveland's "Conservatism" in Regard to the Removal of Republican Office-Holders.

There is a curious impression that the new Democratic President has been and is disposed to be very conservative in regard to the redistribution of the patronage. The mugwumps, who are usually Civil-Service reformers, profess to be satisfied for the most part with the restraint he is exercising over the spoilsmen, though they criticise some of his appointments. The Democratic politicians, or at least those of them who have not yet received the rewards they expected, are complaining that he is "going too slow." Even many Republicans think that Mr. Cleveland is acting with great moderation and are commending him for it.

This impression is evidently a delusion, judging from the long list of removals and appointments chronicled in the newspapers from day to day. It is to be accounted for in two ways. In the first place it was generally expected that the "clean sweep" would be made immediately,—that all Republicans would be dismissed by a sort of general order and Democrats installed in their places. The Republicans think that Mr. Cleveland is very conservative because this course has not been taken, and the Democrats are complaining because the general order was not issued. And the reason why it is assumed that Mr. Cleveland is exercising great restraint is because he held back as long as the Senate remained in session. The public is very apt to take an impression of a new Administration from the first few weeks, and it was rashly concluded that the early course adopted by Cleveland was a fair sample of his entire career.

The fact is that the Administration is proceeding as rapidly as practicable to oust Republicans from office and put Democrats in their places. No respect is paid to Civil-Service principles. "Suspended" or "resigned" is attached to the name of nearly every officer whose place is given to some one else. The terms are synonymous. The resignations are requested in all cases, and they are handed in merely to avoid suspension. "Suspension" means removal, and so does "resignation." In every case "offensive partisanship" will be alleged, but this term has been given such a broad construction that the bare fact of having voted the Republican ticket, or having failed to vote the Democratic ticket, makes the officeholder an offensive partisan and warrants his removal. The removals are going on at the rate of a hundred or more a day, and as rapidly as the President and his assistants can decide between the claims of the rival applicants for the various offices.

The broadaxe of the Administration is now in first-class working order. The heads are falling in the basket at a fearful rate. There are seven sets of executioners, one for each Cabinet officer. The operators of the machine are covered with gore. The victims include diplomats, consuls, heads of departments, department clerks, postmasters, collectors, appraisers, surveyors, registers, attorneys, marshals, and all classes of officials down to janitors. None is too high and none too low to deserve the guillotine. There is no man in the employ of the Government who does not realize that his time is short. There has been just one re-appointment—that of the New York postmaster—which was made at the demand of the mugwumps. There is no indication that there will be any more. There is no sign that the working of the axe will be suspended until the last Republican in office shall have had his head chopped off.

Those who think Mr. Cleveland is going to be a "non-partisan President" are manifestly deceiving themselves. He could not be if he wanted to be, and he evidently does not want to be. The Republicans must go and they are going now at a rapid rate. It is folly for anybody to attempt to conceal the fact. There will be very few, if any, of the old Republican officeholders left by the time Congress meets.—Chicago Tribune.

A WHOLESALE INDICTMENT.

Mr. Cleveland Charged with Inconsistency and Base Ingratitude.

The presumption of a Democratic President in requesting the resignation of Meade, the Copiah County assassin, is strongly resented by the Democrats of Mississippi. The Jackson Clarion, the accepted organ of the Democratic party in Mississippi, asserts that President Cleveland's demand of Meade's resignation "amounts to an indictment of a whole people."

The Vicksburg Post concurs in this view. It argues with great force that the assassination of Print Matthews in 1883 had a decided effect upon the Presidential election in Mississippi in 1884, for the reason that few people in Copiah County dared vote against Cleveland. "Mr. Meade and his compatriots," it says, "contributed greatly to Cleveland's success in Copiah County, and, if the electoral vote of the State had hinged upon the vote of one county, no doubt Mr. Cleveland's partisans in Copiah would have been found equal to the emergency." It continues that it regards Mr. Cleveland's course in regard to Meade very inconsistent, and equivalent to an indictment of the very people whose votes were necessary to Cleveland's success.

We like this frankness. There is something honest in the straightforward claim that a President elected through assassination is bound in honor and decency to reward the assassins. We are as little able as the Democrats of Mississippi to see how Cleveland with consistency can spurn Meade, when it is admitted and notorious that he owes his seat to the murders committed by Meade and men like him. But for the terrorism created by the cold-blooded and systematic killing of influential Republicans, white and black, there would be no Solid South and no Democratic President to-day.

It is quite usual for men who owe their success to murder and crime to repudiate their criminal agents as soon as they have secured the fruits of their wickedness, but Mr. Cleveland is not going to be allowed to do so without drawing upon himself the charge of gross inconsistency and base ingratitude. The Democrats of Mississippi approve of assassination as a political agency, and they vehemently resent President Cleveland's assumption that assassins are not fit men to hold office under a Democratic Administration.—Philadelphia Press.

The coming wheat crop of Minnesota is estimated at 31,000,000 bushels, a decrease of 14,000,000 bushels from last year's yield. The wheat crop of Missouri is estimated at 11,235,000 bushels.

The New York Sun thinks that the discordant spirit which prevailed in the Republican party is passing into the ranks of the Democracy. Thus it is that history repeats itself. Once before, when the devils were cast out of the man, they entered into the herd of swine.

The insult to the flag, of which the Mormons were guilty, by raising it to half mast on the Fourth of July, on their public and church buildings in Salt Lake City, is an offense not punishable by law, but it will intensify the National feeling of hostility toward Mormonism as a system, and toward the rulers and fanatics by whom it is practiced.

Chicago Journal: Secretary Lamar's desk is curiously arranged. The American flag not having been raised over the Interior Department on the Fourth of July, as has long been the custom, he was asked the reason. He gave no reason, but said that "as he was not at his desk he did not notice the omission." If the desk of the Secretary of the Interior is the only spot from which the dome of the building can be seen, a change ought to be made in its architectural development right away.

There is said to be bad blood springing up between France and England. Reports are to the effect that France demands the withdrawal of British troops from Egypt, and DeLesseps predicts that war will result. On the other hand, dispatches mention rumors of a probable alliance between Germany and England. As soon as Gladstone was out of the way, Bismarck began to warm up to Great Britain, and there is the closest friendship between the two empires. Queen Victoria's oldest child, the daughter who preceded the Prince of Wales into the world, is the wife of the German Crown Prince, and will be Empress of Germany whenever William, now 88 years old, shall pass away.

It is informally given out that the women clerks in the government offices at Washington must go. The ostensible reason for the impending dismissals is that the service can better be performed by men; the real reason is that the places are wanted for small Democratic politicians and their poor relations. Salmon P. Chase appointed the first woman who ever held a salaried and assured place in the federal service while he was secretary of the treasury more than twenty years ago, and ever since that time successive Republican administrations have favored the employment of women in all federal clerkships where they could perform the labor as well as men. There are many such, and some in which a woman's nimble fingers and quick wits make her better for the place than any man or boy; but the women of the country have not been efficient workers for the Democracy, and therefore the female clerks will be gradually hustled away into the limbo prepared for "offensive partisans."

The Petoskey lime company was organized February, '85, with a capital stock of $100,000. President, M. J. [illegible], of Toledo, Ohio; vice-president, W. S. Sly, Jackson, Mich.; E. R. Sly, Lexington, Ill., secretary and general manager. The company owns 223 acres of heavy timber, mostly underlain with limestone, having a water frontage of two and a quarter miles, and an average elevation of 36 feet above water level, off the south shore of Little Traverse Bay, six miles west of Petoskey. In addition to the lime stone there are also extensive quarries of sandstone and a species of gray granite. Docks are being built and shipments of stone have been made to points on the lake. The limestone assays 91½ per cent of lime, 4 per cent of magnesia, waste 0.38, taking over 40 cubic feet of sand to the barrel. One kiln was completed in April and another, with a weekly capacity of 800 barrels, will be completed by July. The water facilities for shipments are unsurpassed. The railroad outlet at present will be through Harbor Springs, but we will soon have the Chicago & West Michigan railway built through to Petoskey. A village has begun to spring up around the works called "Alameda Resort," which will be laid out in beautiful shape. The name "Alameda" is a Spanish word and signifies "Beautiful way." Lots are offered at reasonable rates, and it is designed to make this one of the most beautiful resorts in northern Michigan. Lots will be sold and a perfect title given in fee simple.—Detroit News.

Green of Detroit, Michigan, by assignment of mortgage bearing date on that day and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County on the 19th day of May A. D. 1885, in Liber 10 of Mortgages on page 644, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due and is due at this date, (I having elected, by virtue of the option in said mortgage contained, to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage, due and payable at once by reason of the default of said mortgagors to pay or cause to be paid a payment of interest falling due October 1st A. D. 1884) the whole amount of the principal of said mortgage and unpaid interest amounting to Two hundred and Eighteen and 27-100 dollars ($218.27) and no suit or proceeding at law having been instituted to recover the debt, secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, I shall, on Thursday the twenty fourth day of September A. D. 1885 at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day at the front door of Loveday's Hall in the Village of East Jordan, (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix), sell at public auction the mortgaged premises, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage with interest, costs and expenses allowed by law; Said premises being described as all that piece or parcel of land lying, being and situated in the town of Chandler, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan and known and described as follows, to wit: The East half of the South-east quarter of Section thirty-four (34) in Town thirty-three (33) North of Range four (4) West, containing Eighty (80) acres of land according to the Government Survey together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereafter belonging or in any wise appertaining, or thereupon situated.

WIT AND HUMOR.

An Ohio man was so badly frightened by a ghost that his hair, which was of a silky yellow, turned black. Several of his brothers are now on the lookout for the same ghost.—Burlington Free Press.

A "constant reader" wants to know how much ashes coal will assay to the ton. He says he bought sixteen tons of coal but he is sure he has shoveled nineteen tons of ashes out of his furnaces so far, and the winter is only half over.

Texan—"I trust, sir, you don't mean to call me a liar?" Stranger—"And if I did call you a liar, what would you do about it?" "I'd do my duty under the law, sir." "And what's that?" "Hold an inquest over your remains, sir. I'm the coroner here."

Betsey, an old colored cook, was [illegible] around the kitchen one day, when her mistress asked her if she was ill. "No, ma'am, not zactly," said Betsey; "but de fac' is, I don't feel ambition enough to get out of my own way."—Harper's Bazar.

"Hello, Jim, old boy," said the conductor to one of his passengers, evidently another railroad man, "how's business with you up on the Northern Pacific?" "Mighty lively when I left—especially mining." "What kind?" "Mining for trains."—Chicago Herald.

There are differences even among [illegible] Princes. The least enterprising and shrewd among them come to America and grind hand organs. The sharp nobleman stays in his own sunny clime, bides his time and finally marries a rich American girl.—Chenango Spectator.

In Corea a woman has no name. She is always somebody's daughter, sister, wife or mother. It is pretty much the same way in this country with the man who marries a popular actress. He has no name, either. He is always somebody's husband.—Norristown Herald.

The telegraph is unbearably grudging in giving up details of the duel at Lawrenceburg, Ind., day before yesterday, when two Kentuckians fought for the possession of a dog. Both men were killed, says the account. Yes! yes! but what of the dog? Is he safe?—Buffalo Express.

A note was taken up a few nights ago to a New York gentleman who was seated in his library. It read: "When you read this I shall be far away." It might have added, "and so will your overcoat," for when he went down to see who had handed in the note his hat rack was bare and the man had gone.

When an Ann Arbor girl makes up her mind to get married she's going to get there, no matter who opposes. Recently one of these ladies grew tired of the monotony of single life and she went unattended to the most dismal part of dismal Dakota, there met and loved a man and married him before he discovered his danger.—Detroit Journal.

"Madam," said a woman, addressing the matron of a charity hospital, "can you lend me eight ragged children this afternoon?" "Eight ragged children! What do you want with them?" "Well, you see my husband is in the penitentiary, and I want to get him pardoned. Want the children to go with me when I call on the Governor."—Arkansaw Traveler.

It was at the roller-skating rink. They were gliding gracefully around the wild expanse to the entrancing strains of "See-saw." He was one of the proud—but so bashful—rink professors, and she a giddy young miss—and so pretty. See, she bends her graceful head to catch the encouraging words he is whispering to her—so full of flattery. How sweetly she smiles as he whispers: "And were you ever at Albany before?" "O, yes," he replies; "a few years ago I had the pleasure of visiting your beautiful city, and, I remember it well, I stopped at the Kenmore." Not so romantic when, a few days after, the proprietress of the Kenmore happened to be one of the onlookers at the rink, and, while talking with this sweet young miss, espied the dandy professor who had stopped at the Kenmore. "Why," she exclaimed, "there goes one of my old elevator boys."—Albany Journal.

His Opinion of Brown.

Nicholas Hill, the brightest lawyer probably that ever practiced in the Albany County bar, was a bluff, hearty, manly fellow, who always said what he meant and meant what he said. Of a deep, acute, logical mind, he was frank withal and could never successfully dissimulate or conceal his true sentiments. An amusing instance of this is given, when, upon a certain occasion, he apologized to a politician (we will call him Brown) for speaking of him in rather harsh terms at a great political meeting of those days. "Brown," said he, "I feel that I have said a great many hard things about you, and now that all the old issues are buried and the follies of the campaign at an end, I feel that I ought to make an apology to you for what has happened and have it settled up." "Oh, don't mind that," replied Brown, "let it pass. If you keep quiet in the future I will be satisfied." "No, no," persisted Hill, "I've called you a public thief, a liar, and a scoundrel." "Never mind, I beg of you," was the polite answer. "But I do," rejoined the lawyer; "I have called you a villain, a scoundrel, a trickster, and—and—I'll be hanged if I don't think so still." It is not narrated that Brown laughed heartily at the [illegible] of his legal friend.—Albany Argus.

Continuation of the Street Car Conductors' and Drivers' Strike—Cars Run Under Police Protection—Violent Demonstrations.

Chicago, July 7.—Cars were run yesterday on four of the West Side lines—Lake, Randolph, Van Buren and Madison streets. They are still under the protection of the police force, although the number of officers to each car has been diminished. The noon hour released nearly three thousand mechanics and laboring men from the factories and machine shops in the neighborhood of Jefferson and West Randolph streets, and they all with one accord congregated on the latter street to watch the cars go by. The crowd allowed several cars to get through without molestation, merely contenting itself with jeering and hooting at the police and carmen on board. Cries of "Rats!" and "Scabs!" were indulged in extensively without notice from the police. About 12:30 o'clock car 340 came along on the way down-town ...

A Reign of Terror Inaugurated by the Striking Iron-Workers—The Employes in Various Works Compelled to Quit Labor—President Brown Badly Beaten—The Street-Car Troubles in Chicago Adjusted in a Manner Satisfactory to All.

Cleveland, O., July 8.—On Monday the striking rolling-mill mob, having been snubbed by President Chisholm, of the Cleveland rolling mill, and advised by the Mayor to be orderly, went home to the Eighteenth Ward and held another mass-meeting. It rained too hard for active operations, although a large meeting was held and a perfect patrol system was organized and is now being carried out by the strikers with military procession to keep the black sheep from entering the mills. Yesterday morning a crowd of yelling Poles with drawn knives was seen pursuing a man on Broadway, near the mills. He outran them, however. Thomas Brofley, watchman in one of the idle mills, was assaulted by the mob, beaten and taken home. The Polish strikers boast that they ...

... handsome fig-leaf be considered full dress. Unfortunately for them, and luckily for the tailors, this was out of the question, so they took to studying the advertisements of cheap clothing. After deep calculation they found that for four shining images of our gracious queen, they could be provided with swallow-tails, though the quality of the garments would probably leave almost everything to be desired. It was in cases like this that Freddy's talent showed itself. Struck with a brilliant idea, he proposed that they should club together, buy a really good dress suit, and share it as the brothers Box and Cox shared their apartment. This plan was triumphantly carried out, and the brothers soon had the satisfaction of being the proud possessors of the latest novelty, "the new elastic dress suit," as advertised in all the society papers.

As neither brother cared much for the joys of society, the dress suit had an easy time. Probably it thought that Freddy did it the most justice. For Freddy ... had picked up a large bunch of seals with which he walked delicately and jinglingly after the manner of a popular beauty actor; while William adorned himself with a large tawny silk handkerchief drooping from his waistcoat. This was merely for ornament, as he kept one for business in his tail pocket. ...

... on his public duties, and you are alone, for you must occasionally be alone, don't you envy girls less fortunate than yourself in the possession of beauty, social position, a loving father, but who yet have some one on whom to lean for support in all the endless petty troubles of life?"

Miss Dreggs was looking sentimentally into vacancy, but was nevertheless listening intently. Was this young man going to propose? Well, she might do worse. He was good-looking, clever and would be able to bring about her all that artistic and long-haired set amongst whom she had always wished to reign. If he did ask her to be his wife, yes, she would think about it. She knew she could obtain her father's consent were she to set her heart on marrying a crossing-sweeper.

"Has it never occurred to you that your wealth makes you a mark for fortune-hunters and adventurers to aim at? And that it is almost a sacred duty you owe to society to marry a man capable of loving you truly for your own sake?"

Yes, she had often thought this. And it struck her now that she had always admired this sensible and far-seeing young man.

"Well, I suppose I shall marry some day," she murmured. ...

Dreggs. "I don't think I understand you, Mr. Brown," she murmured faintly.

"I mean that I could talk of nothing, think of nothing but you. I felt that it was presumption to hope that you would ever be anything to me but a bright far distant star; in fact, my father, with all the affectionate consideration of a friend, told me my dream was madness. But now, I must tell you, if only once, that with a word of encouragement from you to give me hope, I could work wonders. With your sympathy nothing should be impossible. Ah, if the true and honest affection of a lifetime can give you a moment's pleasure, you may command it. I know that your fortune would always be a barrier between us. What would I not give that you might be as poor as I! Before you throw away a love like mine, think that you must always be sought after by mean and sordid fortune-hunters; and that one day perhaps you will be trapped into a union with one who will make you miserable for life. If you can not accept such a humble but devoted suitor, at least say that you are not angry with me for telling you my secret. The words would out. Lizzie, I love you!"

Ten years ago Miss Dreggs had vowed she would marry nothing less than a peer of the realm. It had been a blow to her to find that the titled ones of the land ...

READING FOR THE YOUNG.

WHY THEY ARE GLAD.

What ... think of ... song
The birdies sing each day?
And what is making the ... so glad
All over the fields they play?

'Tis sunny June, that summer is here;
Summer is ... again;
The beautiful, laughing summer sweet,
That brightens both hill and plain.

And tumbles the daisies all about
Over the meadows fair,
And shakes her bottle of perfume out
To the soft and balmy air.

The birds flew up in the tender skies
Where the white cloud fairies dwell,
And learned the secret that made them glad,
And down they flew to tell.

The little lambs and the gentle sheep
That the summer was close at hand;
And it wasn't long till the glad news grew
And spread all over the land.

So it seems to me that the song they sing—
Those birdies happy and free—
Is full of the beautiful sunshine made
Into glorious melody. ...

Knowing that ... would necessitate the opening of the drawer many times, and consequently disturb the quiet and rest of so young and helpless a family, I decided to remove them to a place where they would be safe from disturbance. I procured a cigar-box, filled it with scraps of paper similar to those in which the young mice were housed, nailed the cover on tightly, cut a hole in the side, and, taking the little mice one at a time, carefully deposited them in the box, which I then placed directly under the drawer in which they were born, and awaited developments.

In a few moments the mother came to the drawer, and, finding her children all gone, with a sad heart she instituted a search. ...

ARRIVED.

The Charlevoix Pier Head Light Here

The U. S. light house steamer Warrington arrived at this port Friday morning with the material, ready fitted, for the construction of the Charlevoix pier light. A force of six men was left here to put it together and to build a trestle work, ten feet high from the shore, so that in case of heavy seas the keeper will experience no difficulty in attending to his duties.

The light is to be a fixed red light of the fifth order, visible 15 miles out, and will be placed 36 feet above the water.

The tower, 16 feet square at the base, will be completed next week but the trestle work to the shore will require four weeks to finish.

A new boat, ... last winter, will be put on the ... Frankfort and Traverse City about July 6th, with Peter McGregor as captain. It will only be a matter of trial; but if a fair living can be made, we will thus be highly favored. Let it be remembered the Capt is one of the most obliging of men; and, whether he stops on the route or not will depend on whether the people do their part well. We know not how people in other places have suffered; but, those living in Leland, find it costs what an article is worth to get it carried from Traverse City by stage. Let us all do what we can to retain the boat that will soon be here.—Leelanau Enterprise.

The distribution was as follows: Middle States, [illegible]; New England States, 20; Western, [illegible]; Southern, 26; Pacific States and Territories, 10; Canada, 24.

Colonel John Gibbon, of the Seventh Infantry, was on the 10th appointed Brigadier-General, vice General C. C. Augur, retired.

According to the June wheat report of the National Agricultural Department issued on the 10th the aggregate yield was estimated at [illegible] bushels. The condition of corn was higher than in any year since 1880 (1882 excepted), and cotton had materially improved.

The men-of-war Tennessee and Yantic, under command of Admiral Jouett, were on the 11th ordered home from the Isthmus of Panama, as the trouble there seemed to be at an end.

An order issued on the 11th directed three thousand troops from the departments of Texas and the Platte to Fort Reno, Indian Territory, for service against the hostile Cheyennes.

For the first eleven months of the past fiscal year the imports of the United States [illegible]

[illegible] ment in Indian Territory was increasing, and bands of Cheyennes were constantly on the move, stealing horses and cattle. The Indians appeared to be anxious regarding the Government's intentions, and were desirous of a "big talk."

At Shauneey, Ga., R. M. Peacock and Charles Thompson shot and killed each other during a quarrel on the 10th, and a stray bullet killed a negro who was standing near.

The Governor of Kansas on the 13th sent a letter to the Secretary of the Interior protesting against the transfer of the Apaches from Arizona to the borders of Kansas.

Early on the morning of the 14th an Indian raid was reported near Eagle Pass, Tex., in which fifteen Mexicans were killed. The cavalry having been sent to the Indian Territory leaves that section unprotected.

At Youngstown, O., Mary Clemens, aged 103 years, two months, died on the 11th. Her father and mother lived to the age of 100 and 110 respectively.

It was reported on the 14th that the Cheyennes were leaving their reservation in large squads, scattering in all directions. Dispatches received at Fort Omaha stated that no further danger was apprehended.

Ceremonies at the Opening of the International Park—A Great Concourse of Visitors—Music, Speeches and Parades—A Woman Swept Over the Falls.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 16.—The formal transfer of the lands chosen for the State Park took place yesterday afternoon. The morning opened without a cloud and continued clear till noon, when a slight shower laid the dust and cooled the air, but did not disturb the exercises. A salute of one hundred guns was fired, the military marched, and the townspeople and many thousand visitors paraded and then wended their way to the park. There were no Canadian troops present, owing to the unsettled question of admitting foreign armed soldiers across the border.

Flags, bunting and banners were to be seen in all directions as far as the eye could reach on both sides of the river, the stars and stripes mingling with the union jack. Private residences made an elaborate display. The great crowd fringed the Canadian precipice from the bridge to the Horseshoe fall. They moved in procession across the bridge, and in Prospect Park they formed a living parapet along the precipitous river side. All points of view on Goat Island were taken up early, and the spectators hung and stood about on the Three Sister islands, having come in by rail and by wagon from the American and Canadian sides. THE IRONY OF TIME.

If we could resurrect the years again
When life is on the wane—
If we could learn by many a bitter truth
The value of our youth
Ere the inexorable hand of Time
Has harvested our prime,
How we should drain from every flower we meet
The last drop of its sweet!
We scorn the present boughs and strive to borrow
Some foretaste of the morrow,
The morrow has its morrow and the pain
Of hope deferred again;
So waste the years till age, defeated, stands
Desolate, with empty hands.

Pilgrims on paths our fathers trod before,
We trace their footsteps o'er
On every height, in every vale meet
Signs of their toiling feet,
Gashed on the rock and wounded by the thorn
Where we are stung and torn.
What was it that they sought? O burning eyes!
Fixed on low western skies,
The beckoning shapes that seem so fair to you
Wear the same dazzling hue
That lured the Vikings through tempestuous seas
Beyond the Hebrides,
Toward purple isles of peace and golden lands,
To die on freezing strands.
[illegible]

going to do that, and then come back. Haven't you seen him?"

The elder Cradlill stood bewildered and speechless for a moment, then exclaimed, giving his thigh a loud slap with the flat of his hand:

"I'll bet a cent I've locked up Cy!"

If any person had been present, rash enough to accept Mr. Cradlill's not very heavy wager, that person would certainly have lost. While the father had taken his son for a robber, the son had entertained an equally absurd suspicion of his father, whom he was waiting in the granary with an uplifted peck-measure, ready to bring it down upon his head, when the door was slammed, and he found himself locked in.

It was some seconds before, in his excited state of mind, he was able to reason out the actual fact of the situation. By the time he came to the conclusion that it was his father who had shut him up, his father had gone. Immediately his strained nerves began to relax, and he seemed melting into a cold perspiration, while a ghastly sense of the humor of the thing succeeded his terrified but heroic resolution.

"No use of calling now," he said to himself. "I ought to have done it before." The little window was nailed fast, and could not be opened. "Never mind, he'll get help [illegible] breath and composure of mind, and wait for what was to happen next, which proved to be something quite as strange as any event that had occurred that night.

Cyrus had by this time roused the Dunfry boys, Reub and Bill, and enlisted them in his enterprise.

"I've already called for Joe," he said, as he returned with them in haste toward Ferris' house. "But he's down with a fever, and can't go."

"Down with a fever?" cried Bill Dunfry, incredulously. "That can't be, for I saw him splitting wood by his back door at sundown. I'll find out about that!"

He ran forward and gave two or three thundering raps on the side of the house with a club he had caught up for use in the anticipated struggle with the robber.

"Joe!" he shouted, repeating the raps as his companions came up. "Come out! You're wanted!"

Again a head was thrust from the upper window. It was that of Joe himself. Seeing Cyrus and the Dunfry boys with a lantern, he said, with a yawn that was somewhat overdone:

"What's up now, boys?"

"Cy has locked a thief in his granary," Bill replied, "and he wants help to go and take him out. What's the matter? Sick?"

[illegible]

panions, one of whom he recognized by the lantern-light as Joe.

"Come in! come in, all of you!" he cried. "There are some things that need explaining."

"I should say so!" exclaimed Cyrus. "After you shut me up in the granary, the real thief came, and I shut him up. Where is he?"

"When I went to let you out," said the father, "he knocked me over and got away, shutting me up."

"It beats all the mixed-up messes I ever saw!" laughed merry Joe Ferris. "How did you get out?"

"That's the strangest part of it all," said Mr. Cradlill, ushering the men into the kitchen. "The robber's wife had somehow got word that he was locked in the granary, and she came to his rescue. But that was after he got away, and she kindly released me instead. Here she is, with her hatchet!"

And in the shame-faced creature hiding in the corner Joe Ferris recognized his own devoted Jane. He had missed her on his way home, where he had just arrived and learned of her absence from their oldest girl, when he was called out by Cyrus and the Dunfry boys. In going with them he had been fearful that they might fall in with her, and he was congratulating himself on escaping that peril, when [illegible]

The Iowa Supreme Court has rendered a decision that is of considerable importance not only to hotel keepers but to the traveling public. It is that a hotel keeper who receives guests knowing that there is contagious disease in his house is liable for damages to any guest who may contract the disease.

Attorney General Garland has rendered a decision on the three points relative to the acceptance of the Dolphin by the government submitted to him by Secretary Whitney. The attorney general holds that the vessel cannot be accepted; that no contract exists between Mr. John Roach and the government; and that the large sum of money paid to him for the vessel may be recovered.

The Lowell (Mass.) Daily Courier fairly sizes up the civil service reform of our Democratic Administration in these words: "There is a constant backing and filling by the independent press as to the genuineness of Democratic civil-service reform. Now and then the Administration makes a demonstration in its favor, but there are only exceptions enough to prove what the rule is—to wit: that this is a union pure Democratic Administration, and that nobody on the whole is entitled to get or keep an office who is not an Administration man. Any other view of it is born of twaddle and cant."

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food; gases are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy, weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS. Take no others. Sold by O. B. TO CONSUMERS --OF-- FLOUR.

It is a fact that Flour made by the ROLLER PROCESS from Grand Traverse Wheat, will make A LARGE PERCENTAGE MORE BREAD to the barrel than Flour which is EQUALLY WHITE, made from ILLINOIS and WISCONSIN Spring wheat which is almost universally No. 2 or rejected, very little No. 1 wheat being ground in either of these states.

WE PARTICULARLY CALL ATTENTION to our FAMILY BRAND made ENTIRELY OF GRAND TRAVERSE WHEAT by the ROLLER PROCESS, to be had of J. L. HURD & CO., CHARLEVOIX and of any other responsible dealer at other points in ¼, ½, or 1 Bbl. Sacks, as low as any Flour of equal whiteness in the market. Try it and you will be convinced that the above is a fact. Prices quoted to dealers upon application to HIGH MOUNTAIN SPOOKS.

Uncanny Sounds Heard and Mysterious Lights Seen by the Valley Residents.

Superstitious residents of the regions known as Preakness, Haledon, and other suburbs hemmed in by the lofty hills known as High mountain, writes a Paterson, N. J., correspondent to the New York World, place extra bolts on their doors now o' nights and are careful to be indoors "after hours." Numbers of superstitious ones, and some who are not superstitious by any means, are willing to make affidavits that they have heard uncanny sounds proceeding from the heights, and nearly everybody in the vicinity who has been near the foot of the mountain after dark will vouch for the statement that mysterious lights have been seen flitting to and fro up among the trees. No soul lives there, and, as it is said that several murders have been perpetrated there, the villagers state, with a solemn shake of the head, that "the devil is at work and no mistake," and that there are "spooks on High mountain."

A party of the braver and brawnier lads of the bailiwick endeavored to solve the mystery a few nights ago, but they soon returned with white faces and quaking limbs, and informed those in waiting by the stove of the place of rendezvous that it was all well enough for them to be sittin' there toastin' their shins and jokin', but if they wanted to find out anything about the spooks they had better make the trip themselves. Upon being mollified with "something hot," they became more communicative and related to their open-mouthed audience the following hair-curdling tale.

They said they had climbed to the top of the mountain, where the lights had been seen, when all at once they were surrounded by lights that jumped around them and climbed the trees and performed other acrobatic feats. Although they appeared to be right in the midst of the flames not a hair of their head was injured and their clothing wasn't even singed. They smelled phosphorus just as plain as it could be smelled, and while they were wondering what to do next the wind whistled through the trees, producing such unearthly sounds that they came right straight away and let the wind have it all to itself.

Doubting Thomases in the audience plucked up courage and firearms enough to make the trip themselves and they, too, soon returned, looking as pale as the historical ghosts and shaking like rattle boxes. Nobody [illegible]

[illegible] the gentlemen who own High mountain, but they will have to seek foreign aid to unearth it, for no native will go within gunshot distance of it since the experiences above related.

Although doctors, as a rule, are particular in warning others not to attack too many large dinners, there is probably no other body of professional men who find so much honest pleasure in gathering around the festive board.

The coat was a very bad fit—too full in the back. "That'll never do," said the customer, "it's like a shirt on a bean pole." "Dot coat, mein friend," replied the dealer, "isht a very stylish garment. Look at dot back. Mein gracious, it is lofty. See dot beautiful puffing—der latest style, and don't you forget it. It was made on Fifth Avenue. It is der Fadder Hubbard style, and is actually worth so much as five toller more for dot cut." And five minutes later the delighted customer left the store with his Father Hubbard coat.—Whitehall Times.

The Toronto Presbytery by a vote of 27 to 12, has decided that a man may marry his wife's sister. In the near future the Toronto man will sit cracking his fingers by the kitchen stove, and will say: "Your sister Ann Josephine didn't use to brown her flapjacks, Maria." Also, "Your sister Ann Josephine didn't use half the coal you do, Maria." Also, "Your sister Ann Josephine was a great woman to darn socks, Maria." Until Maria will straighten her back and exclaim: "If you don't shut up about my sister Ann Josephine, I'll let you have this skillet 'side your head."—Pittsburg Chronicle.

"Ise very sorry, boss, dat I was led astray ter take de watch," said Jim Webster to an Austin justice. "I am glad to see that you regret your crime. What was it that led you to take the watch?" replied his honor, calmly. "I was deluded by de chain, sah. I believed it was a solid gold chain, and dat dar was a gold watch hanging at de end of it. De chain deluded me, sah, inter taking de watch. De brass chain am de curse ob all ob dese heah complicashuns." "You will not be deceived by chains for a time at least if I can help it," remarked his honor, giving him two months on the chain gang.—Texas Siftings.

Purity of the Language.

A language club is the latest innovation in New York, where a number of very estimable gentlemen propose to unite for the preservation of the English language in its purity.

To the movers in this scheme their purpose seems, no doubt, a very laudable one, but it is a difficult task they are undertaking. "Pure English" is an elegant phrase. It suggests culture and refinement and accurate use of language. But what does it mean? What is "pure English?" Is it the language of Chaucer or Shakspeare, of Byron or Tennyson, or of the daily papers in England and the United States? Who is to be the arbiter? Where is the line to be drawn?

The answer to these questions, it will be seen, is not an easy one. Nor is it by any means certain that it is worth answering. The establishment of a right standard of purity in English, even if it could be accomplished, would hardly be desirable. There would be no objection, perhaps, to an arbitrary law restricting the present generation to the use of such words as have an established standing and lineage. But we have no right to so legislate for any future generation. Language is a means, not an end. The same causes which first drove the inhabitants of the globe to articulate speech in the expression of wants and ideas are still operative. The people of to-day have the same rights their ancestors had to invent a name for thoughts, sentiments, emotions, ideas or things, and it is unjust to attempt to charge their inventions with impurity until they have been made and tested. If a word is wanted and shows by general acceptance that it is wanted, it is as "pure" as any of the Chaucerian or Shakspearian vocabulary.

Whatever else, then, the purists may do, they must not attempt to hamper the genius of the American or English people by restricting them in their inherent right to coin words when they find a need for them. If they make the attempt they will surely fail.—Detroit Free Press.

Another Genius Gone.

The Postmaster at Lickskillet, Ark., writes as follows: "Don't send your paper any more to Oscar Hallum, for he's dead. He wuz a mighty good reader, he wuz, and would sometimes read one of your jokes in such a funny way that folks would laugh. 'Twan't what wuz in the artikle, but it wuz the way he read it.

"He oughter been the editor of a paper like your'n. That feller could make a dog [illegible] just like a [illegible] has tuck to [illegible] Oscar yellin' [illegible] allus wanted [illegible] trade, but [illegible] fur any such [illegible] had or had [illegible] a show. He [illegible] county clerk, but [illegible]. He wa'n't [illegible] nor none of [illegible]. When an [illegible], and they [illegible] he jes [illegible] let old Webster [illegible] he could. [illegible] fur it grieved [illegible] when he died. [illegible] me further [illegible] Oscar should [illegible] an' then [illegible] more than I [illegible] fellow say some [illegible] on the lookout [illegible] I thought I'd [illegible] he's dead."

A Wicked Boy.

[illegible] lives in Washington. [illegible] observatory a few [illegible] recently he had [illegible] of some magnitude [illegible] of the larger [illegible]. That night, [illegible] went to work, he [illegible] apparently in [illegible] amazed him the [illegible] give a couple [illegible] out, only to [illegible] second or two. [illegible] finally for a few [illegible] to do sums to [illegible] heavens that expressed [illegible] placed. He [illegible] locality, and next [illegible] all over the [illegible] discovered a new [illegible] the third magnitude [illegible] at it for [illegible], and then [illegible] to the man in Washington to know what he meant. [illegible] took another look and found that the new star had moved 18,000,000,000 miles in twenty-four hours, and upon examining it closely was alarmed to perceive that it had legs. When he went on the dome next morning to polish up the glass he found the lightning bug. The bill for telegraphing dispatches amounted to $2,000, and now the astronomer wants to find that boy.

Lady Maud Ogilvie, who is now visiting her British brother at his ranch in Colorado, is democratic enough in this country to dress very plainly, cook for her brother's men, break a pony occasionally, and claims to be an expert at putting up stovepipe.

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that deadly disease Malaria, with all its malignant elements, Dyspepsia, Female Prostration, Tired Feelings, Debility, Constipation, Skin Diseases, Sick Headache, Dizziness, Eruptions, Scrofulous Sores, Malassimilation of Food, Kidney and Liver Complaints are easily and permanently cured by using Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier, a purely vegetable tonic, the Best Known. We do not claim that it is a cure for everything, but as the health and vigor of the system depends on the purity and vitality of the blood, we conclude that a medicine that gives life and vigor to the blood as Prince Tonic and Blood Purifier does eradicates all traces of impurity and disease from it. Try it before it is too late.

JOHN ROACH'S FAILURE.

The Great Shipbuilder Makes an Assignment for the Benefit of His Creditors—He Lays the Blame on the Attorney-General's Late Decision as to the Dolphin—Secretary Whitney Gives His Views of the Failure—The Government Will Not Lose Anything.

NEW YORK, July 20.—Late Saturday afternoon a notice of assignment was filed in the County Clerk's office by John Roach, the well-known ship-builder. About the same time notice was posted at the iron-works on East Ninth street to the effect that employes would be paid on Monday by Mr. Mooney, Roach's book-keeper, and that the works would be closed till further notice. George M Quintard and George E. Weed are named assignees, and preferences are given to the amount of $423,217.78. The preferred creditors are William Rowland, of New Brunswick, N. J., $62,217.18, the Mechanics and Traders' Bank, of Brooklyn, $20,000, and P. W. Gallaudet & Co., $40,000. Shortly after the notice was posted at the works Mr. Roach, accompanied by his two sons, Garrett and Stephen, left for the shipbuilder's place on the Sound. Mr. Garrett Roach said in answer to questions that the complications arising from the recent decision of Attorney-General Garland had induced his father to place all his property in the hands of trustees, so that the interests of all creditors might be guarded. Mr Quintard, one of the assignees, said the assignment had been a surprise to him. There was no doubt as to its being due to Secretary Whitney's action in the case of the Dolphin, and he (Quintard) thought Mr. Roach feared similar action on the part of the Secretary in regard to other contracts. There was $90,000 owing to Mr. Roach for repairs on the double-turret monitor Puritan, besides money on the three cruisers, the Atlanta, the Boston and the Chicago. He believed there was $— due on the Chicago and $6,000 each on the Atlanta and Boston, and uncertainty as to payment of these amounts was the cause of the assignment. Mr. Quintard thought Mr. Roach's property was sufficient to pay all claims. He added that Mr. Roach was completely broken down physically. M. Aaron J. Vanderpoel, one of the great ship builder's lawyers, said his client was a very sick man, but he was sure every creditor would be paid in full, as Mr. Roach could pay two dollars for every one dollar he owed. Mr. Vanderpoel refused to say anything as to Mr. Roach's total liabilities.

CHESTER, PA., July 20.—The news of the failure of John Roach caused considerable excitement here, where his solvency had never been questioned. Up to within a year ago his weekly pay-roll was never [illegible]

THE FIRE FIEND.

He Gets In His Work Among the Newspaper Offices of the National Capital—The Washington "Post," "Critic," "Gazette" and "National Republican" Burned Out.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—About eight o'clock last evening a fire broke out suddenly in the Post building at the corner of Tenth and D streets northwest, and soon the upper stories were wrapped in flames. The building was occupied by the Washington Post, the National Republican, the Washington Critic, the Sunday Gazette, the United States Electric Light Co., and several other tenants. The editorial, composing and press rooms of the four papers are completely ruined, and the business offices are flooded with water. The building, which is owned by Stilson Hutchins, was valued at $80,000, and is said to be covered by insurance. Both the Post and Republican used the same press, valued at $20,000; insured for $15,000. The Critic press was valued at $15,000, and is supposed to have been insured. In the basement of the Republican office was a press owned by ex-Secretary Chandler and valued at $25,000. There were in the building also the plates of Mr. Stilson Hutchins' new book, entitled, "The National Capital, Washington, Past and Present." The plates were very valuable, and are a total loss. Besides the plates 5,000 copies of the new work were burned. The Gazette is owned by Thomas S. Morrow, whose loss is not heavy. The total loss will reach $150,000, about two-thirds of which is covered by insurance.

The editors of the Evening Star at once tendered the use of their office to both the Post and Republican, and those papers will be issued as usual to-day.

While the building was still in flames the editors and printers of the Post and Republican were hard at work at the Star office, preparing for to-day's issue. While the origin of the fire is not definitely known it is believed to have broken out in the engine room of the Electric Light Company. The plant of this company was in the Post building, and soon after the fire broke out every electric light in the town was suddenly extinguished, leaving certain quarters of the city in comparative darkness.

DUST AND ASHES.

She practiced on him all her wiles
Till in love's silken net she caught him,
And showered on him her sweetest smiles
When to her feet she captive brought him.

But when he pleaded with the maid
To be regarded as her lover,
She sighed a little, blushed, and said
"Please wait until the summer's over."

And then began love's golden dream,
To every picnic, every dance he Took her, and bought her lemon cream
And other things that maidens fancy.

At beach hotels with her he hopped,
For she was quite an ardent dancer;
At length the youth the question popped,
And waited for the maiden's answer.

It drew the sweetness from his life,
It burned and scorched him like a blister;
'Twas this: "I can not be your wife,
But I will be to you a sister."

A LAWYER'S RUSE.

How a Nevada Disciple of Blackstone Conquered Two Bores.

A Lively Fight the Result of the Experiment—General Destruction of Office Bric-a-Brac—An Expensive, But Successful, Stratagem.

Littleton Coke, a leading lawyer of the Comstock, is, outside of a court-room, one of the mildest-mannered men that ever cut up a witness or an intestate estate. Off his legitimate battle ground, and in ordinary walks of life, Littleton Coke is patient and long-suffering—would not even utter a word that would disturb the serene rapacity of a gas-fitter. He would smilingly listen by the hour to a querulous old woman, complaining that faces were pulled at her by the children of a neighbor, yet he had for a time tribulations that harrowed his soul down to its lowest levels.

[illegible]

only just begun to tumble; that it will go so far below bed rock that dynamite will not send it up—swears he would not give one bit an acre for such ground."

Smith's eyes flashed and his hair bristled.

"He!" he snorted. "Jones says that, does he? The ass! What does he know about the Golden Shower, or any other mine? If you listen to Jones, he will land your boat for you devilish quick. He hasn't a particle of mining sense, common sense, nor sense of any kind, when you come to pan him out!"

Lawyer Coke detected about this time an uneasy shuffling of feet in the closet. His scheme was working. Chuckling inwardly, he said: "Why, Smith, I have always understood Jones to be a sharp dealer in stocks, and that he has made some pretty good hauls."

"Good hauls!" Smith repeated. "I don't believe he has ever made a splitter. As he has nothing to put into stocks, how in thunder can he get anything out of them?"

"But I have always understood Jones to be rather a heavy dealer," the lawyer said.

"Heavy dealer be hanged!" Jones replied. "He stands before the bulletin boards in front of the offices of the brokers, and blows by the hour about the good turns he has just made. Never a stock goes up but he has just bought 500 or 1,000 shares, and never a stock goes down but he has just sold in the nick of time. All this time he does not own a share of anything, except, perhaps, some wildcat that is off the Board. He's the boss liar of the Comstock!"

A sound from the closet as of the grating of teeth reached the ear of the lawyer. He smothered a chuckle and proceeded with the witness: "Oh but you must be wrong, Mr. Smith. You must be wronging Mr. Jones in what you say. Mr. Jones dresses well, and lives well generally; therefore he must be making something in stocks."

"Not a splitter!" said Smith. "Not a splitter, I tell you! He owes everybody that will trust him. He owes his tailor, owes at his restaurant, owes for his lodgings, and would have been at the end of his string long ago, but that his landlady and some other fools believe him when he blows about his big [illegible]

We believe it was Lord Barrymore who, at Newmarket, among a vast crowd of the sporting world, mounted himself on a chair, and, having made a signal for silence, said aloud: "Who wants a horse that can gallop twenty miles an hour, trot seventeen, and walk six?" FROM WASHINGTON.

The President on the 17th ordered General Howard, Commander of the Department of the Platte, to make all possible preparations for any emergency that may arise in the near future in Utah.

There were 185 business failures in the United States and Canada during the seven days ended on the 17th, against 194 the previous seven days. The distribution was as follows: Middle States, 16; New England States, 27; Western, 49; Southern, 34; Pacific States and Territories, 30; Canada, 14.

At twenty-six leading clearing-houses in the United States the exchanges during the week ended on the 18th aggregated $813,686,176, against [illegible] the previous week. As compared with the corresponding period of 1884, the falling off amounts to [illegible] per cent.

According to the Chief of the Bureau of Statistics the number of immigrants arriving in the United States during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1885, was [illegible], a decrease of 122,013 as compared with the immigration of the preceding fiscal year.

The Secretary of War on the 20th instructed General Sheridan to take such measures as may be necessary to open and keep open, for the passage of cattle and other purposes of inter-State commerce, the trails and highways leading into and from Indian Territory.

According to reports of the 20th, [illegible] men were said to have been killed in a battle between the Government forces and revolutionists in Colombia.

Standard dollars for the week ended to the number of $20,081 were issued July 18.

At seven o'clock, as the three physicians were at dinner, Harrison came to the hotel and called Dr. Douglas, who went at once and alone to the cottage. Soon afterward another messenger from the cottage summoned Dr. Shrady and Sands, and they repaired to the cottage, closely followed by Dr. Newman. The exits of the doctors and clergyman from the hotel were, however, so quietly effected that few knew that they had been summoned. Arrived there, they found the General evidently sinking. He seemed restless. "Would you like to lie down, father?" asked Colonel Fred Grant. The General nodded, and at the same moment essayed to rise unassisted, but the effort was too great and he sank back into the chair. The Colonel and nurse aided him to arise and then supported him to the bed, where he was carefully lowered to a reclining position and partly on his face. Dr. Douglas then rolled the chair back, and one of the physicians has since remarked that the General had left his chair for the last time.

The family were all gathered at the side of the sick man, and again Dr. Newman, at about the same hour as Tuesday night, and at Mrs. Grant's request, knelt beside the General and prayed. Heads were bowed and silent tears were on the cheeks of men as well as women. After an hour death seemed a little less rapidly gaining on the man it has pursued just nine months, for it is just nine months ago yesterday that General Grant walked into Dr. Douglas' office to seek his professional aid for the cancer that has done what foes and war could not. Then the doctors and clergyman strolled out upon the piazza and sat near the parlor window and Jesse Grant joined them at times, but the other members of the family remained in the sick-room and watched and waited while the General answered "yes" and "no" to several [illegible]

HER LETTER.

[A young naval officer, who after the wreck of the Huron, was sent to assist in recovering the bodies, found a letter from a young lady to her lover which suggested the following lines.]

We walked at night the wreck-strewn sand,
We walked and watched the dying storm,
With eager eyes and ready hand
We sought to find some sea-tossed form.

From out the scattered wreckage waste
I stooped and picked a little note,
A dainty monogram was traced
Above the lines the owner wrote;

"My darling"—but it gave no name,
As if he only of mankind
To such sweet title had a claim;
The words were coined her love to bind.

'Twas written full and crossed again,
All interlined with afterthought,
'Twas spotted o'er with salter stain
Than e'er the sea could yet have wrought.

"My darling," there a fold was pressed,
The words just here were fainter yet,
As though 'twere worn upon his breast,
A priceless and sacred amulet.

She spoke of spring and Easter flowers,
Of silk and satin for her bonnet,
Of sick friends, funerals, marriage flowers,
Her new suit and the trimmings on it.

* * * * * *

Somewhere, to-night, a grief-tossed [illegible]
Is raised to God in mute despair;
Somewhere a woman prays for grace
And strength of soul her load to bear.

Somewhere along the wintry coast
Her hopes lie buried in the sand,
While this tells of the loved that's lost—
This sea-stained letter in my hand.

ROLPH VS. ROLPH.

How Two Boys Assisted In Re-uniting an Estranged Couple.

[illegible]

"Well," said Grid, mollified and melted by these memories of past confidences; "I don't mind telling you." (Which was very probable, since he was burning to begin.) "To-day, while I was putting up books in Mr. Briefly's room, a heavily veiled lady came in, followed by the ancient himself who says: 'Please step into my consultation chamber, Mrs. Rolph.' That's what he calls the musty little cubby-hole chock full of papers and dust that opens into the office. She took off her veil as they went in, and I just caught sight of her face—by Pyramus and Thisbe, Johnny (that's another one of Briefly's cuss words), I never see a lady so beautiful. Her physiog—that's what Briefly calls a face—was one of those smooth, soft, peachy ones, with the daintiest curve to her cheeks and long, curling lashes. I couldn't see her eyes—they may be brown, or black-brown I should say—but I'll bet a double allowance of pudding that they are lovely.

"She seemed to be kind of troubled and ashamed to be seen there, by the way she hurried into the cubby-hole, and when the ancient shut the door after 'em he didn't notice that the transom was open.

"My ladder was against the bookcase nearest the door, and when I climbed upon it to put away a book I could hear as plainly as if I were in the same room. Well, I was longer putting up that book than I have been in dusting the whole library, and Briefly says that's long enough to tender me a fixture that would jibe with the reality—whatever that means.

"'Mr. Briefly,' she says in a sassy kind of a voice, like Henervett in the 'Two Orphans,' 'when you came to my father's house three years ago to see me married, you little thought—I little thought—that before three brief years had elapsed I should come to [illegible]

And when the school was out, with pride
To take her home he hurried.

Ah! but the sight to me was dear,
So trusting, she, so tender!
He was her little cavalier,
Her watchful, brave defender.

"My little man," I said, one day,
[illegible]
The nicest girl in school? And pray,
Who do you think the neatest?"

Upon the wee one at his side
He smiled and fondly kissed her;
Then answered, with a flush of pride:
"Oh, you must mean my sister."

... comes to worship and ask some favor of the god, and each person leaves [illegible] with the [illegible] of the temple. In my native city festivals similar to this occur two or three times in the week in different parts of the town. Of course the schools are kept open on such festal days, otherwise little study could be accomplished. Schoolboys go to the shows in the evening and girls too, sometimes, go by themselves to enjoy the sights.

But there are holidays which may be called national, since they are observed all over the country.

First and most important are the New Year holidays, which are celebrated with as much [illegible] as [illegible] pyrotechnics, calls of ceremony and universal good-will and joy will contribute. Debts are paid up at the end of the year, and for the first week or two little or no business is transacted. Every one gives himself up to jollity. Children on such days are surfeited with sweetmeats, and holes are made in their holiday clothes by burning fire-crackers. Largesses are bestowed upon both children and servants, while beggars are also remembered, so that this season is really the most joyous of the year—the time when charity is most charitable [illegible]

—Harbor Point wants a larger hotel.

—The Daily Resorter continues to be a favorite with resort people.

—Last Wednesday the mercury reached 98° in the shade at Kalamazoo.

—Stockman & Iddings have a force of five tinners at work in town and on the resorts.

—Everyone should attend the Northern Michigan Regatta at Charlevoix, Friday, August 14th.

—As noted in another column, Charlevoix harbor is down for $50,000 in the Engineer's recommendations.

—Preaching at the M. E. church next Sabbath morning by the pastor. A most cordial invitation is extended to all.

—Mr. J. S. Smithson will give a gospel address at the Congregational church next Sunday morning. All are welcome.

—The M. E. church was well filled Sunday by Episcopalians and others who listened to the service by Bishop Gillespie.

—At Mrs. E. M. Clark's for the summer: Dr Johnson and two sons, of Peoria, Ills., Mrs T. B. Carse and Mr. John Carse of Chicago.

—The McGibenys failed to play the second night at Charlevoix, the sale of reserved seats not being sufficient to warrant a second appearance.

—H. Lee Iddings has a $20 bird-dog, "with a pedigree," to succeed the royal Rex that passed into the happy hunting grounds, by the poison route, last winter.

—Miss Kittie Blake of Jackson, Miss L. Reynolds of Lapeer and Mrs. H. K. Wesner of Streeter, Ills., are stopping at the "Bleu" cottage for the balance of the season.

—The infant child of the late Mrs. Dr. Graves will remain in Charlevoix with Mrs. Papinan until fall, when it will be cared for by Mrs. Graves' sister, Mrs. Ed. Bixby of Kalamazoo.

—The Charlevoix rink was well filled Saturday evening to witness the Polo match between the "Hungry Seven" and "No Names" of Charlevoix. It is intended to play the resort boys soon.

—Grant memorial service at the M. E. church next Sabbath evening. An oration, with recitations and reminiscences. It is expected that several persons will take part. We hope to make it an occasion of interest.

—We inadvertently omitted to mention the Grant memorial service Sunday at the Congregational church, last week. An unusually large audience listened to the interesting exercises. The church was appropriately draped.

—The services at the Parker house, Thursday evening, prior to sending away the remains of Mrs. Dr. Graves, consisted of reading the scriptures and prayer by Dr. Brooks of Kalamazoo and a few remarks by Rev. J. T. Iddings, her pastor.

—The legerdemain entertainments by Prof. Harvey, Friday and Saturday evenings, were not as well attended as their excellence merited. Prof. Harvey is a superior magician and with proper advertising, should he ever visit us again, would draw full houses.

—Another scoop! The "second class news paper" failed to discover that there was a game of base ball between the Petoskey and Charlevoix nines the Friday previous to its publication. It might have taken it from the SENTINEL along with the other local items it stole.

—Kalamazoo Telegraph, July 30: The remains of Mrs. Graves will arrive here tomorrow morning at nine o'clock via the G. R. & I. railroad, and will be temporarily deposited at Mountain Home cemetery until cooler weather makes it possible to remove them to St. Louis. The funeral services having been held at Charlevoix, the hearse will only be accompanied to the grave by the carriages of the friends.

—At Charlevoix the party were taken in charge by the hospitable citizens of that delightful town and after short welcoming exercises at the opera house were feasted at the hotels and resorts and right royally were they entertained. Charlevoix, one of the handsomest and most noted of the many magnificent summer resorts of the Traverse region, is situated on one of the most beautiful sheets of inland waters in the world—Round lake. The town is substantially built of brick, the country round is becoming each year more highly improved; splendid drives, the best facilities for all aquatic sports, an open handed generous people make it a delightful spot in which to spend the summer months.—Chase Eclipse.

—John Bacus has returned to Charlevoix.

—Attend the Georgia Minstrels Saturday evening.

—Twenty performers and four end men Saturday evening.

—The cutter yacht Sadie of Chicago was in port Saturday.

—Chas. J. Grier and wife left Friday for a three weeks visit in Charlotte.

—The Charlevoix Improvement Association now has a membership of eighty two.

—H. Lee Iddings has a new Hall type writer. Messrs. Stockman & Iddings are agents.

—After next Monday 10 cents will be charged at the rink every evening, for admission.

—Go on the Faxton excursion to Traverse City, Saturday, and see the magnificent new Asylum.

—The receipts from sleeping cars this season are already larger than for the entire season last year.

—The Grand Rapids gives an excursion from Petoskey and Charlevoix to East Jordan, next Saturday.

—George Beauvais, the young son of Jos. Beauvais, fell and broke his arm while doing the board fence act, Saturday.

—The Blatchford and Wilson cottages on the Chicago resort caught fire yesterday from defective flues. Slight damage was done.

—O. S. Washburn, L. D. Bartholomew and L. F. Allen have been added to the executive committee of the Business Mens Association.

—The frame for A. D. Cruickshank's residence, north of Thos. Boak's, on the north side, is up. It presents a fine appearance from the lake.

—Base ball at Harbor Springs Friday. Harbor Springs 1, Harbor Point 2. The game was pronounced the finest ever played in Northern Michigan.

—It is a rule that has no exception that the theaters and other entertainments that advertise the best, receive the best patronage. The same is true of business men.

—A dramatic and musical entertainment will be given at the Chicago club house Monday evening, for the benefit of the Congregational church. All are invited.

—The Annual Convention of the Charlevoix county Sunday school Association, will be held in Charlevoix on Wednesday, Aug. 19, 1885. The program will be published next week.

—The Wequetonsing dock fell yesterday while the Gracie Barker was landing. Mrs. Van Sickle and Mrs. Strong of Kalamazoo fell with it into seven feet of water but were rescued unharmed.

—Rev. J. T. Iddings preached to a large congregation in the woods near Black's school house last Sabbath, and will preach from the same place one week from next Sabbath, at 3 o'clock.

—We received, Saturday, a pleasant call from Dr. Stone of the south side resort. The venerable doctor was the editor of a newspaper 52 years ago in New England, was "under the oaks at Jackson" at the birth of the Republican party, founded the sterling Kalamazoo Daily Telegraph and is the father of that illustrious republican, James H. Stone of Detroit.

—The Daily Resorter, speaking of Charlevoix, says: "The citizens are justly proud of their town, and manifest a commendable spirit of enterprise and hospitality, and the writer, speaking from two years' acquaintance with the place, has no hesitancy in saying that the intellectual and moral standard of Charlevoix people is superior to any place of its size he has ever known."

—At Charlevoix we were received by a committee, escorted to the opera house by a brass band, listened to an address of welcome and then turned over to the different hotels to be banqueted, once more free of expense. Charlevoix lays claim to being the best adapted by nature for a summer resort of any place in this region, owing to the fact that it enjoys the advantage of two lakes, on one or the other of which the water is always still. The cottages, many of them very artistic in appearance, are arranged in terraces on the banks which rise to a height of about one hundred feet, and the whole forms a beautiful picture.—St. Clair Republican.

—Petoskey Record: "We regret to learn that Blood Bros. are considering the expediency of moving their Petoskey plant to Clarion where they already have a mill in operation. Their lease of the ground at mouth of Bear Creek has expired and the citizens of Clarion have raised $600 in money and offer team land for a site if they will remove. We should be sorry to see the factory removed from Petoskey. They pay out nearly $20,000 a year in wages and for logs, all of which is expended here. The withdrawal of that amount of circulating capital would be felt by the business men of Petoskey, and we certainly hope that some arrangement may be made by which the enterprise will be retained as one of the leaders of the business life of our town."

—C. P. Avery is again among us. Mr. Avery has this season 600 acres of seed peas among the farmers of Grand Traverse, a large proportion of the acreage being in Banks, and Torch Lake Townships, Antrim county. Mr. Avery, to prove the advantage of drilling and cultivating this crop, has this season induced Mr. M. Vanderrew, of Torch Lake to drill in a five acre field of peas, and cultivate them. The drills are sixteen inches apart, and Mr. V. has expended sixteen days of extra labor in cultivating. The result has fully justified the outlay, the field is said to be well worth a visit. Mr. Avery estimates that the field will be fully if not over 30 bushels per acre, and that Mr. V. will realize five dollars for every extra day of labor expended.

—C. Y. Cook has twenty three boarders.

—Joseph Goss returned last week and is visiting his parents.

—Will Smithson, nephew of J. S. Smithson, came Sunday.

—A party of thirty for the Chicago Club House, came Monday.

—G. W. Reed, wife and children, of Stanwood, are at W. A. Smith's.

—They think they have got it again in Charlevoix—a floating mill.—Record.

—The Congregational ladies give an ice cream sociable at the church, to night.

—The W. C. T. U. meet Friday afternoon at three o'clock at Mrs J. A. Hawkins'.

—Mrs. M. V. Whitney and wife of Caledonia are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Hawkins.

—Judge H. A. Clover delivers the Grant reminiscences at the M. church Sunday evening.

—The furnace whistle was heard Monday, and the familiar bump of the big bellows will soon be heard in the land, thereabouts.

—Travel to the North country is steadily increasing, and the more the people go North the more they want to do so.—Grand Rapids Eagle.

—The time has come when the public safety demands that a higher estimate be placed upon the value of human life, even though it be an Indian's.

—The 'Hungry Seven' Polo club were victorious Saturday evening. The club is composed of Messrs. Covert, Kanagy, Weaver, McDonald, Arthur Meech, Loveday and Kanagy.

—Sunday evening a fire damaged the Clifton House, Petoskey, to the extent of several hundred dollars. Miss Etta Rowan lost her entire wardrobe, but none of the guests suffered any loss.

—Ezra Meech, of Winfield, Kansas, brother of Hon. F. J. Meech, is lying at the point of death from the effects of a fall from a horse sustained last week. Miss Jessie Meech left for his bedside Saturday.

—Comrades of the G. A. R. and all citizens should not fail to be at the town hall Saturday at 3 o'clock and take part in the exercises in memory of General Grant. Show your reverence and honor for America's greatest military son.

—The improvements of the past year upon our harbor have amounted to $5,228, thus leaving $4,802 available. Experience has shown that the south pier, instead of the north one needs extension and the amount allowed of the $50,000 recommended for the next appropriation will be used for that purpose.

—Speaking of Charlevoix, the Saugatuck Commercial says: "This popular summer resort—becoming more prominent every year—is situated on the shore of Lake Michigan and at the entrance to Pine Lake, and thus lies in a peculiarly attractively and romantic position. Its population is about 1,200, and its citizens are made up of people full of vim and push, the two articles so often found wanting in small towns. Unfortunately for the town they are still without railroad communication, and this is a thing to which early attention should be given by her wide awake business men, the more so since the distance is but sixteen miles to Petoskey. The town boasts two good papers, well patronized, two banks, three hotels, two carriage and wagon shops, a saw mill, sash, door, and blind factory, boiler shop, machine shop, a good union school with five teachers, two churches, besides other industries. It is also the county seat of Charlevoix county. We know its public spirit will become known to outsiders, and we hope the people will see their efforts to become a city crowned with success, as they deserve to be."

The Three Oaks Sun gives Charlevoix a column and a half of press excursion advertising from which we clip as follows: "Dinner was partaken of with a relish in compliment of the whole-souled people of Charlevoix. Charlevoix is pleasantly located and sheltered from the winds and storms. It lies on both sides of Pine River, (which is said to be the shortest river in Uncle Sam's domain) facing Round Lake, a very small, deep lake, with pure, clear water, like all other lakes in this region in that respect, having a channel large enough for steamers between Round and Pine Lakes, Pine Lake has two arms, each eighteen to twenty miles long. On the bold banks of Round Lake may be seen some of the most pleasant resorts of Northern Michigan. Charlevoix is a charming place, and the party were loth to leave it and its warm hearted people. The Charlevoix region is one of the most famous fishing resorts of northern or any other part of Michigan, the many land locked lakes abound with lake trout, black bass, pickerel, perch and herring. The Boyne and Jordan Rivers that empty into these lakes, together with their tributaries, are stocked with the speckled trout and grayling; every one can fish up here three times a day. They (the fish) are taken from the pure clear water and kept alive until they are laid in the cooking pan, and when brought to the table to be served are crisp, sweet and of superior flavor. There is much of romance in so large a party visiting these points or summer resorts, and yet material pleasure and solid comfort is enjoyed. If you ever visit Northern Michigan, especially in the summer time, do not fail to visit Charlevoix with its beautiful lakes, enchanting surroundings, and most hospitable people."

It is reported that Judge Fallass told the President recently that Democrats must be put into all the federal offices in Northern Michigan if the state was to be won by his party. Then the president read the judge a lecture on civil-service reform before he was ushered out into a cold world without the scalp of a single Republican officeholder dangling at his belt. The civil-service reform dodge has elements of great value to the president: it kills off the bores with great certainty.—Post.

CALLING THE MEADOW BEAUTY.

Fair Jenny Dean came down the lane
Just as the dew was falling,
And o'er the meadow one could hear
Her sweet young voice a calling:
"Co-boss! co-boss!"—her golden hair
Was o'er her shoulders flowing,
"Co-boss! co-boss!"—the clover thick
Was all about her blowing.

The pearly bloom of her fair face
Was flushed with earnest wooing,
The sun, with slanting beams afar,
Was lost in golden gleaming,
And still she cried: "Co-boss! co-boss!
You heed nor lads nor lasses,
With head so deeply buried in
The tender meadow grasses."

She turned to think of something new
With which to coax the beauty,
For Jenny never failed to do
A loving daughter's duty—
When, lo! their neighbor's handsome son,
To make his journey shorter,
Had crossed the field, and stood before
The farmer's sweet young daughter.

Her father watchful eyes had been,
And lavish in his telling;
He did not wish to have the lads
Come oft about his dwelling.
He thought as fathers often think,
With wisdom great in measure,
To always be at mother's side
Should be a daughter's pleasure.

So Robert, rogue, had double aim
In coming through the clover,
He had a little plea to frame,
And longed to have it over.
He longed to know if Jenny's eyes,
With power of fine discerning,
Had e'er descried the [illegible]
Within his bosom burning.

"Forego for once your evening task,"
He said, with head averted,
"I have a little boon to ask,
A right to be asserted!
To yonder highway, waiting near,
We'll walk, for no one passes,
The dews are falling thickly here
Upon the meadow grasses."

school in a distant city; and at the end of that period she had made a long visit in the luxurious home of one of her school friends, where she had contracted tastes and habits which had effectually destroyed such fitness for a life in her own modest home, and the duties there devolving upon her, as the fashionable school had left.

Out in the garden Bertha made a few listless attempts to amuse the restless baby, and then drew from her pocket a letter she had recently received from her dear friend. Its glowing picture of the delights of an endless round of parties, operas and other pleasures, with its warm expressions of sympathy for herself in being condemned to endure the trials of an "uncongenial home," drew tears of self-pity from Bertha's eyes, and did not serve to increase her store of patience with her little brother.

As time went on she still quietly but persistently avoided interesting herself in the concerns of her home. She moped and pined for gayeties of which she had found a slight taste so delightful.

"Why don't you go out more with Helen Mayne?" asked her mother one day, anxious to interest her in something.

"I tried that once, you know," said Bertha, "and that was enough to show me that our tastes differ entirely."

Mrs. March could not help mentally agreeing with her daughter, but did not speak.

"Yes," went on Bertha, "what a dance she did lead me that day! I saw enough sick, discontented poor people to last me for some time. She left me to attend to one of her pets while she went somewhere else. I had to wring out hot cloths to put on Susan Brown's sprained ankle, worked over her and bore with all her whims and complaints till I was completely tired out, and [illegible]

FIRE-WORKS.

How Their Invention Led to the Invention of Gunpowder.

Fondness of the Chinese for Pyrotechnic Displays—A Perennial Fourth of July—The Grand Centennial Display—Famous European Illuminations.

It used to be supposed that the invention of gunpowder led to the invention of fire-works, but it is now almost certain that the invention of fire-works led to the invention of gunpowder. To make twenty ounces of the best gunpowder we mix together fifteen ounces of saltpeter, three ounces of powdered charcoal, and two ounces of powdered sulphur. This proportion is not always followed, but it is a standard mixture, and it is the one used in the royal gunpowder factory of England. If we leave out the sulphur, we shall have a very explosive substance, and one that will answer the ordinary purposes of gunpowder tolerably well. Sulphur improves the article, but the combination of saltpeter and charcoal is the essential secret of gunpowder, and it was this fact that led to the first production of fire-works.

When we inquire into the origin of great inventions, we often find ourselves in China, or looking over books about China. All over the great plains of China and India saltpeter is found in abundance, pure or mixed with the soil. It is easy to suppose that, away back in the early ages of the Empire, people made fires in the open air upon some piece of ground strongly impregnated with saltpeter. Suppose a fire extinguished, leaving upon that nitrous soil many small pieces of charcoal and charred wood. The tread of the passer-by, or the tramp of cattle, could grind that saltpeter and charcoal into crude, rudimental gunpowder. Then imagine another party making a fire upon the same spot. In this way, or at least in some similar accidental manner, probably occurred the first discovery of gunpowder.

The Chinese themselves say, and the Imperial records of Pekin attest, that they have used gunpowder in fire-works for about two thousand years. To the present year the Chinese are extravagantly fond of fireworks. Every great festival in China is a tremendous and universal Fourth of July, from which one thinks of running away, as we do. The whole population seem to enjoy not merely the fire-works, which fill the air at night with splendor, but those also which merely make a great noise.

The celebrated Catholic missionary M. Huc, in describing the manner in which he was received by the Mandarins of a Chinese city, speaks of the "prodigious quantity of crackers, suspended in large bundles on bamboo poles, their dry and noisy detonations never ceasing for a single moment." Every now and then, he adds, there was an explosion of a great bomb, which silenced the rattling of the fire-crackers, while at the corners of the courtyard "great dragons and other fabulous monsters vomited fire." He describes more particularly a fire-work which the Chinese call a flying sun, resembling a wheel. It was put on a large plate, and the plate laid upon the ground. As soon as it is lighted at the fuse, the wheel begins to revolve rapidly, throwing out bluish flames in all directions. Then it whirls up into the sky to an immense height, and lets fall a fiery rain of all the colors of the rainbow.

M. Huc testifies not only to the passion which the Chinese have for fire-works, but also to the fact that they did not invent gunpowder to destroy their fellow-beings, but to amuse them. As M. Huc further remarks:

"They were firework-makers before they were artillerists, and they have remained faithful to their first inclinations, liking squibs and crackers a great deal better than cannon. In all their festivals they are sure to manage somehow or other to bring in fire-works. In the towns and villages you hear fire-crackers popping and crackling at almost every hour of the night and day, so that one might take the whole Chinese Empire for one great pyrotechnic establishment."

Mr. Williams, the well-known American missionary, mentions that on festive days the consumption of fire-crackers in a Chinese town is so great as to cover the streets with the fragments. What an extraordinary taste! Who should dare to complain of our Fourth of July after knowing this? How strange, too, and even how ridiculous, that from a taste which seems to us so childish should have sprung one [illegible]

[illegible] greenish tint, zinc a fine blue color. The combustion of amber affords a yellow flame, while lamp black yields an intense red. The trade has a thousand secrets, some of which never get into print, although there are several extensive treatises on pyrotechnics.

For a popular festivity, like the Fourth of July, there is no conclusion better than a public display of fire-works. It gives pleasure to the whole population that is old enough to keep awake after dark, while to the younger half of the crowd it affords an intense gratification. The great objection is the danger of the whole exhibition being spoiled by a shower of rain.

Perhaps the largest crowd ever gathered in the United States was that which assembled on the evening of the Fourth of July, 1876, in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, to witness the grand centennial exhibition of fire-works. The people began to assemble long before dark, and by eight o'clock it seemed as if the whole immense park was full of spectators. The day had been fine and very hot. Towards eight o'clock a black cloud gave notice of its approach by the sound of distant thunder. At any other time nothing could have been more welcome to a sweltering city, and even then the storm advanced so slowly that few thought of its connection with the impending show. All expected to enjoy the artificial exhibition of fire before the natural one opened. The fire-works began at the appointed hour. Very soon after, a few drops of rain fell, just enough to warn the managers to make haste. The rain increased and it was soon apparent that the whole range of fire-works, including temples, gigantic portraits of Washington, mounds, volcanoes, stars, patriotic mottoes, pyramids, and other structures, all on a scale of magnitude never before seen in America, must be discharged at once, or never discharged at all. The managers took the hint given them by the thunder-cloud, and soon the crowd, which had begun to disperse, was stilled and entranced by the most extensive and splendid exhibition of fire-works ever seen in America at one moment.

The display was wonderfully fine, but very brief, for the rain soon began to dim the brightness of the fire-works. What a scramble it was to get out of the park! Three-fourths of the crowd were some miles from their abodes. Cars, omnibuses, carriages, all seemed powerless even to diminish the wet and clamorous multitude.

The most extraordinary displays of fire-works ever seen in the world used to occur in Rome at Easter, when St. Peter's Church formed the groundwork of the display. There were two exhibitions in the same evening. Before dark the whole of the vast edifice was hung with white paper lanterns. All the architectural outlines of the church, from the portico to the cross above the dome, were marked by rows of these colorless lanterns, the candles of which were lighted before sunset. For some time, against the splendor of the western sun, the lights were not visible, nor the lanterns. As night drew on, the lines of light began to show against the deepening gloom, and the silver brightness increased from moment to moment, until the building stood out at last as if it were drawn upon the black sky with a pencil of light. Nothing of the church was visible, except these fiery lines. It looked as if built of fire. At nine o'clock, upon the first sound of the great bell, flame burst from the cross over the dome. "Instantly," as Mr. W. W. Story describes it in his "Roba di Roma," "a flash of light whirls over the dome, climbs the smaller cupolas, descends like a rain of fire down the columns of the facade, and before the great bell of St. Peter's has ceased to toll, the golden illumination has succeeded to the silver."

This second illumination lasts until nearly midnight, a great church of golden fire, inconceivably striking and splendid. Even George Eliot, a woman not prone to be much moved by any such display, was enchanted with it.

"It is a thing," she says, "so wondrous, so magically beautiful, that one can't find it in one's heart to say it is not worth doing. I remember well the first glimpse we had, as we drove out towards it, of the outline of the dome like a new constellation on the black sky. I thought that was the final illumination, when, as our carriage stopped in front of the cathedral, the great bell sounded, and in an instant the grand illumination flashed out and turned the outline of stars into a palace of gold."—Youth's Companion.

FEMALE CONDUCTORS.

The conductors or conductresses are usually young and sometimes quite pretty, being commonly of the mixed race of Spanish and Indian blood. They wear a neat uniform of blue flannel with a jaunty Panama hat and a many-pocketed white pinafore, reaching from the breast to the ankles, and trimmed with dainty frills. In these pockets they carry small change and tickets, while hanging to a strap over their shoulders is a little portmanteau or shopping bag, in which is a lunch, a pocket handkerchief and surplus money and tickets. Each passenger, when paying his fare, receives a yellow paper ticket, numbered, which he is expected to destroy. The girls are charged with so many tickets, and when they return to headquarters are expected to return money for all that are missing, any deficit being deducted from their wages, which are twenty-five dollars per month. As an additional check upon dishonesty spotters are stationed along the line, who hop upon the car as it passes, count the passengers, write the number down upon a memorandum-book, and jump off again. A few blocks further on another spotter repeats the job, and these books are compared by the chief inspectors to see that the returns of the conductress correspond.

The greatest annoyance to the girls is from the young mashers, who follow the cars carrying the pretty ones and chat with them on the platform. These fellows are called mosquitoes here, because they buzz and hop and pester people so. Not long ago a comic paper [illegible]

A Blessing in Disguise.

For ten years the people of Charlevoix toiled as a sweet morsel under their tongue the idea that the substance of all good, the seed of all our hoped for prosperity, lay in the future possession of the county seat.

So deep rooted and firmly seated was this delusion that it took precedence over all other considerations of public good, and centralized what little of public spirit we possessed.

The mania had us so completely in its relentless grip that we could not bring ourselves to think that the same degree of energy and anxiety exercised in a different channel would dwarf the county seat question and bring more lasting and greater benefits.

The struggle came in which we lost the prize for which we had battled so fiercely and so long. The thought then occurred to us that when the Almighty created these waters, these terraces, and the valley below and between them in which Charlevoix nestles as a jewel in nature's magnificent setting, He planned for her a future of trade and busy traffic, of maritime wealth, and commercial activity, in which the ephemeral and delusive benefits of a few county offices would cut a small figure.

The result of the removal of the county seat was an awakening of our people that had in it the vigor and new strength which comes after a long sleep. The organization of the Charlevoix Improvement Association followed, and with an [illegible]

KILLED!

Fatal Brutal Assault Upon an Indian.

Sunday morning, Charlevoix people were horrified to learn of the unprovoked murder of Geo. Optegesic which was enacted on Waw[illegible] hill a mile east of town, near the Colby house, the night before. Justice McLeod summoned a jury for an inquest in the afternoon, the jurymen being S. H. Thatcher, H. Newman, P. Call, [illegible] Kelley, and Jerome Heath. After some little investigation the inquest was adjourned until Monday at 8 a. m., when the following facts were elicited from the testimony of Dr. Carlstein, Willis Colby and the murdered man's squaw.

As Geo. Optegesic, his wife and another Indian were returning home from Alex McSaba's, they were met by a double rig containing four men and a driver. One of the men asked if there was a dance at McSaba's that night. They replied "no." At this the occupants of the buggy began to hurl stones at Optegesic and his squaw. The other Indian became frightened and ran away, crying, "they're going to kill us." When the second stone, four inches through, struck Optegesic, he fell and dislocated his neck by falling upon a stick, producing instant death.

Young Colby witnessed the affair and his testimony is very damaging to the accused. The affair occurred at two o'clock at night, and at five o'clock Neil Barry, Frank Daiga, Will Moore and Ed. Graham were arrested upon complaint of Alex McSaba, at Johnson's hotel, by Sheriff Berdan and confined in the village jail.

The conclusion of the coroners jury was, "That the death of the deceased was caused by a stone thrown by some person to them unknown, striking the breast and causing the fall which dislocated the neck."

"REFORMING" THE JUDICIARY.

Restoring Bourbonism and State Sovereignty to the Control of the Supreme Bench.

Mr. Cleveland having announced his purpose to labor for the restoration of "Jeffersonian Democracy," it becomes a most important question whether he intends to work in that direction in appointing Justices of the Supreme Court. All the other evil the President may do fades into insignificance when compared with the calamity of restoring Bourbonism and State-sovereign bigotry to the control of the Supreme bench and thus making it certain that the work of that tribunal would be taken up again just where it left off in the Dred Scott decision.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

CHARLEVOIX, AUGUST [illegible], 1885.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor
ED F. FARMER, Associate Editor

The New York [illegible] says: "The flags at the Navy Yard have not yet been placed at half-mast, as no order to that effect has been received from Washington. The flags on the foreign vessels in port are at half-mast, and also those on all buildings and offices representing every department of the Government except that of the Navy. The conduct of the Navy Department in this matter is not such as to make a loyal American feel proud."

The annual statement of the imports and exports of the United States has been issued by the Treasury Department, under date of July 22, 1885. The exports of merchandise for the fiscal year ending June 30 were $741,[illegible] and the imports were $577,[illegible], thus making an excess of exports of $164,[illegible]. As compared with the previous year the exports were [illegible] less and the imports were less by $110,220,[illegible]. The exports of gold and silver amounted to $42,[illegible] and the imports equaled $[illegible]. For the month of June the total exports of merchandise amounted to $[illegible] and the imports to $[illegible].

Dr. Douglas, one of Grant's physicians has written a letter to his sister in which he pays the following eloquent tribute to his late distinguished patient:

"Nine months of close attention to him have only endeared him to me. I have learned to know him as few only can know him. The world knew him as a great General, as a successful politician, but I know him as a patient, self sacrificing, gentle, quiet, uncomplaining sufferer, looking death calmly in the face, and counting almost the hours he had to live, and those hours were studied by him that he might contribute something of benefit to some other fellow sufferer. If he was great in his life, he was even greater in his death. Not a murmur, not a moan, not a sigh, from first to last. He died as he had lived—a true man."

The St. Paul Pioneer Press, of July 28 had the following doleful blue remarks about the wheat prospects in that part of the country:

"There is a melancholy monotony in the reports from the wheat fields. The weather continues distinctly unfavorable. That the crop are suffering in all parts of the Northwest, from rust and blight, is undeniable. Just how much it is suffering, it will take the record of the threshing machine to determine. Reports are conflicting, and guesses as to the percentage of loss are wild. In the southern part of the State the rains have not been heavy or continuous. The result there seems to be confined to the low ground where water has stood. But the situation is complicated by insect pests which have committed ravages more or less extensive. If the unfavorable conditions do not continue, the worst that can be said of the crop in the southern counties is that it is uneven—good and bad in spots. The north is free from the chinch bug and weevil, but there has been more rain there, and blight is more general. Probably it is felt more on the low ground lying near the Red river than on the rolling ground of the Park region, but there will be a specific percentage of loss throughout all Northern Minnesota and Dakota. Cool weather and drying winds this week and next will, perhaps, reduce the percentage to a minimum."

The Chicago Tribune recalls the fact that one of the most remarkable speeches ever made by General Grant was on the occasion of the reunion of the Army of the Tennessee at Des Moines 1875. It took the country entirely by surprise. Gen. Grant was then President, and it was supposed that at the reunion he would indulge only in a few words of formal congratulation or reminiscence; but, instead, he made an unusually long speech (for him), and appealed strongly to his comrades to maintain the free school system as the surest protection to the Nation in the future. He made no apology for introducing such a subject at a reunion of soldiers, but declared that the victories of the war would be in vain unless the Nation could find in the future the protection of an enlightened and educated citizenship. The men who had fought for the preservation of the Nation must remember that the free schools were the fountains of public intelligence, and their work the best guaranty for the safety of the Union which the soldiers had defended on the field. In the course of his remarks Gen. Grant said:

"Let us all labor to add all needful guarantees for the more perfect security of free thought, free speech, and free press, pure morals, unfettered religious sentiments, and of equal rights and privileges to all men irrespective of nationality, color, or religion. Encourage free schools, and resolve that not one dollar in money appropriated to their support, no matter how raised, shall be appropriated to the support of any sectarian school. Resolve that either the State or Nation, or both combined, shall support institutions of learning sufficient to afford to every child growing up in the land the opportunity of a good common school education."

—From Traverse City the press gang went on an excursion to Charlevoix and Petoskey, having been tendered the free use of Hannah, Lay & Co's fine steamers, City of Traverse, T. S. Faxton and City of Grand Rapids, upon which the party embarked, reaching Charlevoix for dinner. Here again a most cordial welcome was received, and the party was conducted by the band and citizens' reception committee to their hall and listened to addresses, music, etc., after which they were taken to the various hotels and feasted upon the fullness of the land.

Charlevoix has a population of 1800, is situated on Lake Michigan and is the county seat of Charlevoix county. Pine Lake, a beautiful sheet of water, stretches 14 miles in an easterly direction from Charlevoix, and six miles distant a branch of the lake runs in a southerly direction eight miles, together having 50 miles of coast and being navigable for largest vessels. The lake and "South Arm" are fed by numerous trout fishing streams, notably the Jordan river. Two large summer resorts are located there, and are annually visited by thousands. With her large lumber and business interests, agricultural facilities and other natural advantages Charlevoix is destined to become the metropolis of northwestern Michigan lower peninsula.

Whereas default having been made in the payment of certain sums of money secured to be paid by a certain mortgage made and executed by Samuel Hughes and Sarah Hughes, his wife, of the Town of Chandler, County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan, to the Wayne County Savings Bank of Detroit, a body incorporated and doing business under the laws of the State of Michigan, bearing date the fourth day of April A. D. 1884, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County [illegible] on the 17th day of April A. D. 1884, in Liber 7 of mortgages on page [illegible], which said mortgage was on the 13th day of May A. D. 1885, duly assigned by said Bank to William S. Green of Detroit, Michigan, by assignment of [illegible] bearing date on that day and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for Charlevoix County on the 19th day of May A. D. 1885, in Liber [illegible] of Mortgages on page 641, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due and is due at this date, (I having elected, by virtue of the option in said mortgage contained, to declare the whole sum secured by said mortgage, due and payable at once by reason of the default [illegible] to pay or cause to be paid a payment of interest falling due [illegible] 1884) the whole amount of the principal of said mortgage and unpaid interest amounting to Two hundred and Eighteen and 27/100 dollars ($218.27) and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the debt, secured by said mortgage or any part thereof; Notice is therefore hereby given that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and the statute in such case made and provided, I shall, on Thursday the twenty fourth day of September A. D. 1885 at eleven o'clock in the forenoon of that day at the front door of Loveday's Hall in the Village of East Jordan, (that being the place of holding the Circuit Court for the County of Charlevoix), sell at public auction the mortgaged premises, or so much thereof as shall be necessary to satisfy the amount due on said mortgage with interest, costs and expenses allowed by law; said premises being described as all that piece or parcel of land lying and situated in the Town of Chandler County of Charlevoix and State of Michigan and known and described as follows, to wit: The East half of the north-east quarter of Section thirty-four (34) in Town thirty three (33) North of Range four (4) West, containing Eighty (80) acres of land according to the Government Survey, together with the hereditaments and appurtenances thereunto now or hereafter belonging or in any wise appertaining, or thereunto situated.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach [illegible] teeth, Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and our desire is to prove a better guarantee of its worth than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS. Take no others. Sold by O. B. FLOUR.

It is a fact that Flour made by the ROLLER PROCESS from Grand Traverse Wheat, will make A LARGE PERCENTAGE MORE BREAD to the barrel than Flour which is EQUALLY WHITE, made from ILLINOIS and WISCONSIN Spring wheat which is almost universally No. 2 or rejected, very little No. 1 wheat being ground in either of these states.

WE PARTICULARLY CALL ATTENTION to our FAMILY BRAND made ENTIRELY OF GRAND TRAVERSE WHEAT by the ROLLER PROCESS, to be had of J. L. HERD & CO., CHARLEVOIX and of any other responsible dealer at other points in ¼, ½, or ⅛ Bbl. Sacks, as low as any Flour of equal whiteness in the market. Try it and you will be convinced that the above is a fact. Prices quoted to dealers upon application to—

Purple and Fine Linen.

She stood all robed in splendor, fair as dawn
When first he [illegible] his forehead to the East;
White shimmering satin fell in softest folds,
A royal robe fit for a kingly feast,
And lace that was historic, fine as frost,
[illegible] of its pattern, trailing down
O'er sprays of blossoms, caught with jewels fine;
No fairer sight in all the goodly town.

Yet gazed she on the splendor cold as death,
Yet looked she on the picture still and white;
The flashing jewels caught no answering flash
In eyes that erst were brighter than their light.
No warmth from ruby hangings could light up
The chill of that set face, as silent there
She thought upon the radiance of her life
Given for the radiance of this pageant fair.

—Lettie Tyng Griswold.

Why the Congregation Smiled.

At the dedication of Pilgrim Chapel, Buffalo, William A. Duncan, of Syracuse, the State Sunday school Secretary, was addressing the children in his usual vivacious manner. "Now, I am going to divide your school into three parts," said he. "There are b. b.'s. What are they?"

"Big boys," was the ready response.

"Good. Then there are the b. g.'s. What are they?"

"Big girls," shouted forty voices.

"Right again. And last of all there are the l. c.'s."

"Little kids!" exclaimed a shrill voiced urchin, without waiting for the question.

The congregation smiled vociferously.—Utica Observer.

BILL NYE IN BOSTON.

An Account of a Visit to His Birthplace in the State of Maine.

Last week I visited my birthplace in the state of Maine. I waited thirty years for the public to visit it, and as there didn't seem to be much of a rush this spring, I thought I would go and visit it myself. I was telling a friend the other day that the public did not seem to manifest the interest in my birthplace that I thought it ought to, and he said I ought not to mind that. "Just wait," said he, "till the people of the United States have an opportunity to visit your tomb, and you will be surprised to see how they will run excursion trains up there to Moosehead lake, or wherever you plant yourself. It will be a perfect picnic. Your hold on the American people, William, is wonderful, but your death would seem to assure it, and kind of crystalize the affection now existing, but still in a nebulous and gummy state."

A man ought not to criticise his birthplace, I presume, and yet, if I were to do it all over again, I do not know whether I would select that particular spot or not. Sometimes I think I would not. And yet, what memories cluster about that old house! There was the place where I first met my parents. It was at that time that an acquaintance sprang up which has ripened in late years into mutual respect and esteem. It was there that what might be termed a casual meeting took place that has, under the alchemy of resistless years, turned to golden links, forming a pleasant but powerful bond of union between my parents and myself. For that reason I hope that I may be spared to my parents for many years to come.

Many old memories now cluster about that old home, as I have said. There is, also, other old bric-a-brac which has accumulated since I was born there. I took a small stone from the front yard as a kind of "memento" of the occasion and the place. I do not think it has been detected yet. There was another stone in the yard, so it may be weeks before anyone finds out that I took one of them.

How humble the home, and yet what a lesson it should teach the boys of America! Here, amid the barren and the inhospitable waste of rocks and cold, the last place in the world that a man would naturally select to be born in, began the life of one who, by his own unaided effort, in after years rose to the proud height of postmaster at Laramie City, Wyoming, and, with an estimate of the future that was almost prophetic, resigned before he could be characterized as an offensive partisan.

Here on the banks of the raging Piscataquis, where winter lingers in the lap of spring till it occasions a good deal of talk, there began a career which has been the wonder and admiration of every vigilance committee west of the turbulent Missouri.

There on that spot, with no inheritance but a predisposition to premature baldness and a bitter hatred of rum, with no personal property but a mush suspender and a stone-bruise, began a life history which has never ceased to be a warning to people who sell groceries on credit.

It should teach the youth of this young land what glorious possibilities may be concealed in the rough and tough bosom of the reluctant present. It shows how steady perseverance and a good appetite will always win in the end. It teaches us that wealth is not indispensable, and that if we live as we should, draw out of politics at the proper time, and die a few days before the public absolutely demand it, the matter of our birthplace will not be considered.

Still, my birthplace is all right as a birthplace. It was a good, quiet place to be born. All the old neighbors said that Shirley was a very quiet place up to the time I was born there, and when I took my parents by the hands and gently led them away in the spring of '53, saying: "Parents, this is no place for us," it became quiet.

It is the only birthplace I have, however, and I hope that all the readers of The Globe will feel perfectly free to go there any time and visit it, and carry their dinner, as I did. Extravagant cordiality and overflowing hospitality have always kept my birthplace back.—Boston Sunday Globe.

Editors have their peculiarities as well as other people. They practice and inculcate brevity, which is a virtue. They are absent-minded, which is a failing. It is not strange, then, that one should send a note to his lady-love like the following: "Dearest, I have carefully analyzed the feeling I entertain for you, and the result is substantially as follows: I adore you! Will you be mine? Answer." Then, after a moment of thought, he added, in a dreamy, absent way: "Write only on one side of the paper. Write plainly and give real name, not necessarily for publication, but as a guarantee of good faith."—Boston Courier.

The language of flowers: Poor Charlie sighed and said, "My favorite flower, my dear, is the forget-me-not." "And mine," she said, "is mari gold," and then poor Charlie knew the game was up, and got.—Judge.

Bibliopolistical Flirtation.

A slim, blue-eyed youth and a merry-looking young lady of about 17 were seriously deliberating behind the "poetry shelves" of the Mercantile library which authors should receive their preference.

"I want dear Byron," said the lady decisively. "I've only half read Byron. Don't you love Byron?"

"Well, when I was a younger man," said the youth mournfully for his departed years, "Byron was attractive to me, but my more mature years found me wedded to Tennyson," and he passed his hand across his wrinkled brow like a man who had seen and suffered much.

"Now I don't care for Tennyson one bit," said the lady. "Do pick out something that we both can read." There was a pause for some minutes, then a little twitter of exultation.

"I have it," said the maiden. "Darling sweet Shelley."

"He'll do," said the youth, "let's sit down here where nobody can see us and read him."

The eye of the peeping Tom was on them, but they knew it not. The calm, serene librarian lurked by them, but they heeded him not. They were deep in "Queen Mab."

"That tires me," said the girl petulantly, "turn over to the short poems. Oh, here we are! Let's read this."

When these young parties first sat down there was at least eight inches of space between them, and the gentleman's arm was supported on one of the lower shelves. Now his arm has disappeared, and the tips of his fingers could be perceived on the off side of the lady's leather belt. There was no distance between them, the pattern of the gentleman's inexpressibles mingling with the lady's dress. In other words, they sat as close together as they possibly could.

The fountains mingle with the river,
And the rivers with the ocean.

"Isn't that delicious?" murmured the maiden. "Read on."

See the mountains kiss high heaven,
Now the waves clasp one another.

"A darling Shelley, isn't that just too sweet? Go on."

Now the sunlight clasps the earth,
And the moonbeams kiss the sea,
What are all these kissings worth
If thou dost not kiss me?

It was not the uncorking of a champagne bottle, because no such profanation could occur in the Mercantile library under any circumstances, but the sound was so startling and unusual that Librarian Whittaker stepped behind the shelves, and saw nothing but a young lady glancing indifferently over the pages of a book, and a young gentleman standing on tiptoe, endeavoring to lay hold of a volume on the top row.—Alta Californian.

NINE Presidents and ex-Presidents of the United States have died since Lincoln's first election.

VELOCIPEDES of every kind have been expelled from the streets of Berlin by an ordinance of the police, the legality of which has been upheld by the Prussian Court of Common Pleas, to which some owners of bicycles and tricycles appealed.

ANOTHER insect pest has appeared in Canada in the nature of a small worm, which secretes itself in the heads of clover, entirely destroying the stalk. The spread of the pest is so rapid that the clover crop throughout the country will be almost a total failure.

EXCEPTING President Lincoln and General Grant himself, Colonel Markland, of Washington, is believed to be the only person in the United States who ever held authority to pass to all points within the lines of the Union armies without hindrance or question.

THERE are some thirty post-offices mentioned by a Washington letter-writer as paying their incumbents less than one dollar a year! The postmaster at Kedalia, N. C., drew nine cents last year, but under the two-cent rate it is probable he will not receive more than six cents.

IT is said that no drug ever came so rapidly into conspicuous favor as the hydrochlorate of cocaine, which was used for several months to allay General Grant's sufferings. Its anæsthetic properties were discovered last October, and now it is known and used the world over.

THE internal heat of the earth is being investigated by the German Government. A shaft sunk at Schladebach has penetrated about 4,566 feet underground, believed to be the greatest depth yet reached by boring. At this point the earth's temperature is 120 degrees Fahrenheit.

OF the several commanders of the heroic Army of the Potomac only General McClellan now remains. Scott, McDowell, Burnside, Hooker, Meade and Grant, who in turn commanded that army, have all gone to join the great majority, and Longstreet is the only one of Lee's Lieutenants who lingers with the living.

The residents of Stonington, Conn., assert that it has not rained in that town on the 10th of August for 101 years. That is the day they celebrate, and the weather record has been accurately kept ever since the first anniversary of the battle of Stonington.

At Berne, in Switzerland, a large Bengal tiger escaped the other day from a menagerie. Instead of escaping at large, however, or attacking any human being, it contented itself with killing a large Newfoundland dog and guarding the body until it was recaptured.

The Berlin butchers have a special periodical, which has lately taken pains to expose the secret trade in horseflesh. It has been proved that at Hasenhaide, a suburban resort of Berliners, one thousand pounds of sausages were sold in one week, consisting of lard and horseflesh.

The health-patrol of United States revenue steamers now extends from Maine to the Rio Grande. Officers are instructed to speak to all vessels entering ports, find out whether contagious diseases exist on board, and whether the port of departure was healthy or unhealthy.

P. S. Gilmore led his orchestra in playing "Nearer, My God, to Thee" at Manhattan Beach some days ago while his mother's funeral was in progress. He had been devoted to her, and her death caused him profound grief, but his duties kept him away from the grave, and he guided his orchestra, as he says, through a fog of tears.

During the past year as many as 1,308 wolves were killed in France—9 full-grown males and 32 females, 774 half grown ones, and 493 young ones. The premium paid for killing a grown wolf is 200 francs, for a female 150, for a half-grown animal 100, and for a young one 40 francs. Wolves still exist in all but thirty-two departments.

The police force of the British Empire, metropolitan, municipal and rural, includes 210,000 men. Of these 57,000 are in the United Kingdom and 147,000 in India. If the village police in India be included, the number rises to 500,000, which makes for the whole empire an average of one policeman to every 571 people and to every sixteen square miles.

A German party of rank, on their way to Persia, recently had a curious experience at Baku. To honor them it was resolved to play one of the fountains, i. e., a petroleum well. The fluid shot high into the air, and the Germans were completely soaked in it, as they had no time to escape on one side. The natives did not understand why the Germans made long faces, and seemed displeased; for habit has rendered them indifferent to the odor of petroleum.

Thomas Cooper, of Londonderry, has invented a novel application of the screw power to ships. In a vessel which was launched in that city recently the propeller is nearly amidship, but slightly back toward the stern quarter. It is claimed for it that it will do away with the racing of engines, the screw being in all weathers under water. It is also said that for manoeuvering the screw, as applied, will be of great value to vessels of war of the lighter craft.

The Cologne Gazette points out the curious fact that Munich has 244,000 inhabitants, and only 11,000 citizens. To become a regular citizen it is necessary to pay 100 to 150 marks ($25-$37), and this only a small portion of the inhabitants have done. Those who are not regular citizens are obliged to pay the same taxes as the others, although they are not entitled to vote on commercial affairs. Regular citizens, in cases of extreme poverty, are entitled to liberal pecuniary assistance.

An extraordinary and tragic accident has occurred near Paris. A horse was seen running wildly along the road to St. Germain, the vehicle to which the animal was attached being enveloped in flames. Several persons having succeeded in catching the horse, a dreadful sight presented itself. In the bottom of the burning vehicle the body of the driver was found reduced to an almost indistinguishable heap of cinders. It is supposed that the man, having lit his pipe, fell asleep, and that the burning ashes set fire to the old woodwork.

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

Interesting News Compilation.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Unprecedented honors were paid on the 8th to the memory of General Grant in all sections of the United States. The funeral pageant in New York was the most imposing ever witnessed in the United States, or perhaps in the world. It was after five o'clock in the evening when the funeral-car reached the place of sepulcher in Riverside Park, where the remains were entombed with impressive ceremonies. The President, Vice-President, members of the Cabinet, Judges of the Supreme Court, Senators, Representatives, ex-Presidents, Governors of States and Foreign Ministers were among the distinguished persons who participated in the demonstration. The entire city was draped in the emblems of mourning, and the multitudes which viewed the pageant defied computation. In all the leading cities of the United States, and in hundreds of towns and villages, similar tributes were paid to the memory of the illustrious dead. The American legations abroad were closed during the day, and memorial services were held in Paris, the City of Mexico and other foreign capitals.

John Roach's contracts for building steel cruisers for the Government have been declared forfeited by the Secretary of the Navy. He intimates that the Government will at once go on with the work.

In a collision with riotous strikers on the 12th at Bay City, Mich., Sheriff Brennan was wounded in the head. Nine of the mob were arrested.

The Pennsylvania Greenbackers met at Erie on the 12th and nominated Dr. Whitney, of Warren County, for Treasurer of State. Resolutions were adopted indorsing the National platform of 1884; denouncing the hoarding of money in the United States Treasury, and favoring the issue of full legal-tender money in place of National bank notes.

MUST BE REMOVED.

The President's Proclamation Relative to the Fencing of the Public Domain—Probable Conditional Extension of Time to Cattlemen—Ex-Secretary Teller's Views.

Washington, Aug. 11.—General Frank Armstrong, of the Indian Bureau, has received orders to visit the Apache agency and take a complete enrollment of the Indians there, and to generally look into the management of the reservation. It was General Armstrong who did the work at the Cheyenne and Arapahoe agency which led to the proclamation expelling cattlemen from that reservation. It can be stated upon the very best authority that the President and Secretary Lamar do not believe it possible for the cattle-owners to remove their stock from the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reserves within the forty days prescribed in the President's proclamation. It is the fixed purpose of the President and Secretary to give the cattlemen additional time if the latter manifest an honest desire to move within the prescribed time.

The President and Secretary Lamar have both disclaimed any idea of injuring the lessees and cattle-owners. They say that the occupation of the reservation by the lessees was the cause of trouble with the Indians; that the Cheyennes and Arapahoes are still closely wedded to their nomadic habits, and could not content themselves with a limited quantity of land. The President was satisfied that the only way to prevent trouble with the Indians was to get the cattlemen off their lands, and he felt that that ought to be accomplished as early as possible. The application of the cattle-owners for the extension of time was refused because it was feared that if one extension were allowed the cattlemen would flatter themselves that they could procure another and the President deemed it best to show them that he was in earnest. Under the circumstances named, however, they will be given more time, but if at the expiration of the forty days they have not made preparations to move cavalry will be instantly ordered in to clear them out. Orders have been issued to increase the permanent garrison at Fort Reno to four companies of cavalry and three of infantry, and cavalry will be placed at other points ready for use in expelling cattlemen if it becomes necessary. It is not impossible that the lease of the Cherokee strip may be permitted to stand, as the Secretary holds that these Indians are intelligent and competent to determine for themselves what is for their interest. It is held at the Interior Department, however, that all these leases are illegal.

"By the President of the United States of America—A Proclamation: Whereas, Public policy demands that public domain shall be reserved for the occupancy of actual settlers in good faith, and that our people who seek homes upon such domain shall in nowise be prevented by any wrongful interference from the safe and free entry thereon to which they may be entitled;

"And whereas, To secure and maintain this beneficent policy a statute was passed by the Congress of the United States on the 25th day of February, in the year 1885, which declared to be unlawful all inclosures of any public lands in any State or Territory, to any of which land included within said inclosure the person, party, association or corporation making or controlling such inclosure had no claim or color of title, made or acquired in good faith, or an asserted right thereto by or under claim made in good faith with a view to entry thereof at the proper land office, and which statute also prohibited any person, by force, threats, intimidation, or by any fencing, inclosure, or other unlawful means, from preventing or obstructing any person from peaceably entering upon, or establishing a settlement or residence on, any tract of public land subject to settlement or entry under the public land laws of the United States, and from preventing or obstructing free passage and transit over or through the public lands;

"And whereas, It is by the 5th section of said act provided as follows:

"'That the President is hereby authorized to take such means as shall be necessary to remove and destroy any unlawful inclosure of any of said lands, and to employ civil or military force, as may be necessary for that purpose.'

"And whereas, It has been brought to my knowledge that unlawful inclosures and such as are prohibited by the terms of the aforesaid statute exist upon the public domain, and that actual settlement thereon is prevented and obstructed by such inclosures, and by force, threats and intimidation;

"Now therefore I, Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, do hereby order and direct that any and every unlawful inclosure of the public lands, maintained by any person, association or corporation, be immediately removed, and I do hereby forbid any person, association or corporation from preventing or obstructing by means of such inclosures, or by force, threats or intimidation, any person entitled thereto from peaceably entering upon and establishing a settlement or residence on any part of such public land as is subject to entry and settlement under the laws of the United States, and I command and require each and every officer of the United States upon whom the duty is legally devolved to cause this order to be obeyed and all the provisions of the act of Congress herein mentioned to be faithfully enforced.

"In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

"Done at the city of Washington this 7th day of August, 1885, and of the independence of the United States of America the 110th.

"GROVER CLEVELAND.

"By the President. T. F. Bayard, Secretary of State."

Chicago, Aug. 11.—Hon. H. M. Teller, Senator from Colorado, and ex-Secretary of the Interior, arrived at the Grand Pacific yesterday. Referring to the recent order of President Cleveland requiring the cattlemen holding leases in the Indian Territory from the Cheyenne and Arapahoe tribes to remove their herds within forty days, he said that the President was best able to judge of the situation and the means of preserving peace among the Indians. He denied that the leases, as first granted by those tribes in 1883, had ever been sanctioned or recognized by him as Secretary of the Interior. He remarked that he specifically stated at the time, and incorporated the statement in his reports of 1883-4, that the Government reserved the right to interfere with the cattlemen and remove them whenever it became necessary, either of its own motion or from the complaints of the Indians. In this connection he announced to the cattlemen that if such occupation proved agreeable to the Indians the Government would not interfere with the possessions.

Senator Teller said that for two years the cattlemen occupied the land without friction or complaint. The present reported trouble among the Cheyennes and Arapahoes he attributed to the interference of the men who formerly occupied the land without paying for the privilege, and who were disgruntled because others had secured their old grazing ground, and to men who, desiring the land, were willing to pay more than the present tenants.

Murdered in His Own House.

New York, Aug. 11.—Albert E. Herrick, a wealthy restaurant keeper in this city, was murdered at his Brooklyn home yesterday afternoon under mysterious circumstances. Mr. Herrick's family is in the country, and at 4:15 o'clock yesterday afternoon he went to the house to see that everything was all right. Ten minutes after he disappeared through the basement door he staggered back into the area-way crying "Murder, police." Before help could reach him he had fallen down several stone steps and was found dead at the bottom, with a bullet-hole near his heart and blood rushing from his mouth. It is supposed that he entered the house just in time to catch a burglar at work and so met his death.

Plymouth (Pa.) Again Scourged.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 11.—No sooner has the epidemic of typhoid fever ceased to rage in the unfortunate town of Plymouth, than it is succeeded by another plague scarcely less terrible. A severe form of dysentery is now prevalent in Plymouth, Kingston and vicinity to an alarming extent, and it is even more deadly than the fever. It is a disease that has always been frequent in Plymouth and neighboring towns during the summer, but never before were there half as many cases as there are at present, nor was the disease so virulent and fatal in its results. There are over one hundred and fifty cases now under treatment.

A DEN OF DEATH.

Twelve Miners Suffocated by Gas in a Pennsylvania Mine—The Accident Caused by the Breaking of a Machine Which Furnished the Fresh-Air Supply—Agonizing Scenes at the Mouth of the Pit.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Aug. 12.—The mine of the West End Coal Company at Macanaqua, about eighteen miles down the valley, was the scene yesterday of the most terrible accident in this region for fifteen years. The fan which furnished fresh air to the mine broke down, the colliery filled with gas, and a great number of men were asphyxiated. Twelve are known to be dead. Nine others were seriously injured. This terrible loss of life was the result of an oversight, if not a neglect of duty, on the part of Christopher Conrad, the mine boss. The fan broke down at eleven o'clock Sunday night, when the night shift was just quitting work, and the gas was accumulating all night. Conrad says he told the men on the day shift that the mine was not safe, and that they should not go down. They, on the contrary, say he told them to go to work; that the mine was safe and the fan would be working in an hour.

About sixty men went down about seven o'clock yesterday morning and had hardly got to their working places when they began to feel the influence of the gas. These suffocating fumes are very sudden in their action on the human system, and almost before the men were aware of their danger they became unconscious or crazed. Some one reached the foot of the slope and gave the alarm, which was rapidly conveyed to the surface and help was summoned from all sides. A few of the men in the mines succeeded in reaching open air, but the majority were brought out insensible by relief parties that fought their way through the deadly gas until they stumbled over unconscious forms, or until they themselves dropped to the ground overpowered. The first relief party went too far, and all were prostrated. One of the number, Peter Boraski, who had gone in to rescue his brother, was brought out dead.

The work of getting out the men, both dead and alive, lasted until six last evening. At one p. m. operations were abandoned for a time, all the leaders having been overcome by gas, it being certain that those then in the mine were dead. At that time only three dead bodies had been recovered. Among those who were overcome by the gas were Major C. M. Conyngham, of this city, and John Seasdale, of Shickshinny, both stockholders in the West End Coal Company. At 4:30 operations were resumed and six more bodies were recovered. There were still three known to be in the mine, and there may be more.

While the work of rescuing was going on the most terrible excitement prevailed outside the mines. Hundreds of people had gathered, among them being the wives, mothers and children of the men below. Many threw themselves on their knees and prayed aloud. Others seemed bereft of their senses, and ran through the crowd shouting the name of some relative and calling for help. As each victim was brought to the surface the body was surrounded by an eager throng, and the shriek of agony that frequently rose from the group testified to the recognition of the purple and distorted face of some relative or friend. Over sixty men were brought out unconscious. Those who revived are little the worse for the experience, and in a few days will be all right again.

No one was hurt externally, and no damage was done to the colliery, which will resume work as soon as the fan is repaired.

A HORRIBLE REVENGE.

A Negress Tortures an Enemy's Babe by Giving It Lye.

Nashville, Tenn., Aug. 12.—One of the most horrible crimes ever perpetrated in Tennessee was committed here Monday night by a negress named Anna Davenport. She had had a fight with another woman named Millie Plummer, about a week ago, and had since been heard to threaten to kill her. Millie became frightened and moved to another part of the city. Early Monday evening Millie left her four months-old baby at home and went to a ball. About ten o'clock a policeman passing her house heard the infant screaming and broke in the door. Anna Davenport was standing over the child, which was half covered with a quilt. The policeman threw back the covering, and found that the head, face and neck of the child were covered with blood. The skin was peeled off in great blotches and half of its lip was eaten away. The woman was arrested and a physician called. Anna Davenport forced the baby to swallow concentrated lye, and had poured the stuff over its body. The can in which the lye was carried was found under the bed. The woman was hurried to jail, as threats to lynch her were frequent. The child is dying.

Shipping Millions from West to East.

Washington, Aug. 12.—An appropriation of $150,000 was made at the last session of Congress for the transportation of about $40,000,000 in gold coin from the sub-Treasury at San Francisco to the sub-Treasury at New York. Owing to the high rates asked for by the express companies the Secretary of the Treasury decided to transfer the coin by registered mail. So far about $10,000,000 has been transported in this way. The money was mailed in $50,000 packages. In view, however, of the publicity which was given to the method of transportation it has been deemed best to suspend further shipments of the precious metal for the present.

Relic-Hunters at Grant's Grave.

New York, Aug. 12.—Notwithstanding the great care that has been taken to prevent damage to the exterior of General Grant's tomb, sacrilegious visitors have succeeded in knocking off pieces of the bricks on the corner of the vault as mementoes, and in defacing it by writing their names upon the brick-work with pencils. On a dark night, even with the precautions that have been taken, it is feared that further injury may be done, and in order to guard more securely against it, the Park Commissioners have decided to light the exterior of the tomb by electric lights.

Deadly Dysentery.

Mount Pleasant, Pa., Aug. 12.—Great fears are entertained that dysentery will become epidemic in Bridgeport, a mining village one mile south of this place. Yesterday over thirty cases were reported and there have been five deaths so far. Impure water and filth generally are the prime causes. In many places the atmosphere is filled with a stench which at times is nearly unbearable. Owing to the slackness of work at surrounding coke works starvation stares many in the face, and it is nothing unusual to hear children cry for bread. The head of one family said this afternoon that there had been nothing in his house to eat for two weeks but bread and water.

Destructive Tornado—Damage to Crops and Farm Buildings.

Findlay, O., Aug. 12.—A report has reached this city of a destructive tornado which passed across the eastern parts of Blanchard and Liberty townships, this county. Trees and fences were leveled. Corn was thrown down and parts of farm buildings were blown away. The storm was a very fierce one, and swept a swath from twenty to forty yards in width, taking everything before it for a considerable distance. The damage will amount to thousands of dollars, but can not be accurately estimated now.

A DEATH-DEALING CLOUD.

The Village of Norwood, N. Y., Almost Completely Demolished by a Cyclone—Eight Persons Known to Have Been Killed, and Many Others Fatally Injured—A Cloud-Burst at Hoffman's Ferry.

Ogdensburg, N. Y., Aug. 13.—The little town of Norwood, St. Lawrence County, thirty miles east of this city, on the line of the Ogdensburg & Lake Champlain Railroad, was visited by a terrible cyclone yesterday afternoon. The little town was almost literally wiped out of existence, and eight persons are reported to have been killed during the terrible storm, which was of but three minutes' duration. While the storm was in progress hailstones as large as a man's fist fell, and not only destroyed the growing crops but assisted the cyclone in doing very serious damage to the buildings. The day had been warm and sultry, and shortly after four o'clock a heavy storm, accompanied by thunder, lightning and hail, passed over the entire northwestern section of New York State. The atmospheric disturbances and the electric phenomena were unusual in their character throughout the entire country, and much damage to growing crops was done by the storms in all sections which have been heard from. The storm seemed to culminate in the valley between Norwood and Potsdam, where its force was expended, and the greatest damage done. The wind blew terrifically, and with such force as to wipe out everything in its immediate path. Trees were uprooted as if they were but stalks of wheat. Fences were blown over, and the great sheet of water which swept over the surface of the country literally wiped out everything before it. Houses, barns, one church, and the Ogdensburg & Lake Champlain Railroad bridge over the Racquet River were destroyed as though they were built of nothing stronger than cardboard. A great stretch of the railroad track was torn up and carried many feet from its original position. Telegraph-wires were blown down, and so but the most meager details of the disaster are now to be obtained here.

It is known that at least eight persons were killed. Four of these were men who were employed in building the village school-house. The building was entirely demolished and the workmen were buried in the ruins. Their names are not known here. John Martin, a miller, was instantly killed while standing in front of his mill. Mrs. David Fitzgibbons and a Mrs. Armstrong were also killed by being buried in their houses, which went down before the terrible force of the storm. Several others, men, women and children, were injured, either by being prostrated while in the path of the storm or by being struck by flying timber or buried in the ruins of houses or barns. The number of the casualties is not known, but it is asserted that several were fatally injured. An excursion party of five hundred from Plattsburg are detained here because of their inability to reach home, owing to the washing away of the railroad track and the Racquet River bridge.

Troy, N. Y., Aug. 13.—At five o'clock yesterday afternoon a cloudburst occurred at Hoffman's Ferry, eight miles from Amsterdam. The New York Central Railroad tracks were washed into the river for a distance of five hundred feet and telegraph poles and fences were prostrated for miles. Trains east and west were delayed, the passengers being transferred around the break. A large gang of laborers are at work repairing the damage. The rain fell in sheets, destroying crops and inflicting serious damage in various ways. The loss is estimated at thousands of dollars.

ROUNDING-UP.

The Cattlemen Preparing to Drive Their Stock Out of the Indian Territory.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 13.—Messrs. Ward & Hughes of the Ward-Hughes Cattle Company started for the Indian Territory personally to superintend the removal of their cattle from the Cheyenne and Arapahoe leased land. It is probable that they, together with other lessees, will secure a range in the Cherokee strip. A few of the lessees who have cows and calves in their herds will probably drive them into the Pan-Handle, where they have ranches of their own. As both the Cherokee strip and the Pan-Handle lie adjoining the leases, the drive will not in either case exceed seventy-five or one hundred miles. The cost of making a drive of that distance, including the shrinkage in the herd, is estimated at about one dollar per head. The number of cattle on leased lands is nearly 210,000, which will make the loss to the cattlemen through the removal about $210,000, exclusive of the loss of the fences and other ranch improvements. The work of rounding-up is progressing as rapidly as possible, and it is thought the greater number of cattle will be out or nearly so by the end of the forty days originally allowed by the President. Some difficulty is experienced in getting men and horses to make the drive, but the lessees are putting forth every effort, and will no doubt succeed in getting the assistance.

MAXWELL'S DEFENSE.

He Contends that Preller is Still Alive, and that His Disappearance was Part of a Plot to Swindle an Insurance Company.

St. Louis, Mo., Aug. 13.—The defense of Maxwell, the alleged murderer of Arthur C. Preller, will probably be that no murder was committed at all. About a month ago a report was published that his life was heavily insured, and that the companies had refused to pay the money to his relatives, claiming that it was a put up job to get the insurance, and that the body found in the trunk was not Preller's at all but a subject from a medical college. According to a telegram from San Francisco, Maxwell now says that the conspiracy theory was correct, and that in due time he will produce Preller alive and well and show where he got the body found in the trunk. Further than this he will say nothing. The police here look at this defense, and still hold that the evidence against him is sufficient to convict him, though they do not claim to have any other evidence than what is known to the public. They do not believe that Preller's life was insured for any large amount. The prisoner will reach here next Sunday.

Mob Vengeance on a Wife Beater.

Parkersburg, W. Va., Aug. 13.—The organization of vigilantes known as the Red Men Tuesday made an example of Elmore Creel at Greeve's Run, Witt County, because he was cruel to his wife and children. At midnight Creel's house was surrounded, he being in bed. A squad of the masked men broke into his house and tied his hands, took him to the yard and gave him a fearful thrashing with cowhides and hickory switches. About one hundred lashes were laid on his back. Creel swore out warrants for four of his neighbors, who were arrested and gave bail for their appearance at the next term.

Amalgamated Men Choose Officers.

Wheeling, W. Va., Aug. 13.—The Amalgamated Association Convention adjourned last evening, to meet in Pittsburgh on the first Tuesday of June, 1886. The scale and National Conventions were consolidated and the scale year changed to commence July 1. The following officers were elected: President, William Weihe; Secretary, William Martin; Treasurer, James Penney, all of Pittsburgh. Trustees, Thomas Jones, Bridgeport, O.; James H. Nutt, Youngstown; P. S. Keeney, Pittsburgh. Vice-Presidents were also chosen for each of the eight districts.

LAST SAD RITES.

New York, August 10.—The closing day of the funeral services over the remains of the late General Grant dawned with a clear sky, a bright sun and a cooling breeze. A more beautiful day for the solemn services which marked the commitment to the tomb of all that is mortal of him whom the Nation mourns, could not be wished for. From the firing of the sun-rise gun, the boom of the minute guns, fired at the stated intervals by both the military and naval details, was proclaiming to the people that the last sad rites were under way and before the day closes the hero of the Union will have been committed to the tomb. The church bells began tolling, ringing in mournful cadence, and their pealing added to the general feeling of sorrow everywhere displayed. Not in the history of New York, has there been such universal mourning as on this occasion, nor has there been exhibited such widespread sympathy for the family, of which the Nation's hero was the head. The streets along the route laid out for the passage of the funeral cortege was packed with people early in the morning, many of whom remained up all night for the purpose of securing or holding an advantageous position from which to view the solemn pageant.

The crowds were well behaved and the police arrangements so perfect that the military, Grand Army posts and other societies experienced but little inconvenience in going to the places assigned them. The funeral cortege was the grandest and most imposing of its kind ever witnessed in this or any other country. Fully 100,000 men followed the body to the grave.

At precisely one o'clock Saturday morning the gates leading to the vestibule of the City Hall were closed and the crowds which had been passing in a steady stream received a sudden check. The line ceased moving and those in it looked askance at their neighbors. When word was passed by the police detailed to keep those in line in order that no more would be admitted, thousands were disappointed and their countenances plainly reflected their chagrin.

The line, at the time, extended clear around the park, and for some distance along Broadway and the adjacent streets. It is estimated that fully 300,000 viewed the remains while lying in state here. So hurriedly had they to pass that only a mere glance was allowed.

Immediately after the close of the gates the plaza was cleared and in a few minutes the police were in full possession guarding every approach, and allowing no one but the privileged to come within a stone's throw of the building. The undertaker at once took charge. None but the police and guards and all-night reporters were present at the time.

"Any here who now desire to view the remains will step forward at once," said the undertaker, his voice echoing in the dark [illegible]

[illegible] space at nine o'clock—Company A, Fifth Artillery, under Colonel Beck and Company E, Twelfth Infantry, under Major Brown. The companies and guard of regulars was under entire command of Colonel Beck. The regulars took position beneath the trees opposite the City Hall and stood at rest. Then came the original guard of honor which was on duty at Mt. McGregor. Filing into the corridors of the hall, they took their places beside the remains and rested there, under command of John H. Johnson, Senior Vice Commander of Grant Post, Brooklyn. The men, as they stood, were as follows: Left of casket, Comrades Corwin, Howitt, McDonald, Squires, Knight and Gullman. Right of casket, Comrades Tebbitts, Mackellar, McKelvey, Brodie, Collins and Barker.

At 8:35 the imposing funeral car, drawn by twenty-four black horses in black trappings, halted on the plaza directly in front of the City Hall. Inside the corridor Commander Johnson was waiting. "Column in position right and left," was his command. The veteran guard of honor was erect. "Lift the remains" was the next command, in clear, but low tones. The twelve men stooped with gloved hands. "March" was the word. The body moved. Out upon the portico were borne the remains, Commander Johnson immediately at the head. Down the steps with measured tread, across the open space to the steps of the waiting car. Commander Johnson stepped aside. The silver mountings glistened as the case and its honored burden was carried up and placed upon the dais in the mounted catafalque. The veterans retired down the steps. The body was alone for all to view, but deeply guarded. The honor guard next to the hearse on either side took the same relative positions they had maintained to the remains while being borne to the hearse. The steps were drawn away from the funeral car. Commander Johnson took his place in the centre and immediately behind the funeral car. At his left and right on either rear corner of the car were Comrades Downing and Ormsbie, of Wheeler Post, Saratoga. Next, and directly behind these were representatives of the Loyal Legion, as follows: General Millson, General Carleton, Paymaster G. D. Burton, Lieutenant Colonel Clarkson, Lieutenant Colonel Clark and Captain Blunt.

The clergy and physicians had paid respect to the remains by alighting from their carriages and accompanying them from the steps to the hearse. Colonel Beck, in command of the regulars, commanded his companies to take position, Company A on the right and Company E on the left of the hearse, colored men were at the bridles of the twenty-four black horses, sixteen men, of Meade Post, Philadelphia, of which General Grant was a member, were abreast, directly in front of the team of black leaders, and the David's Island band preceded them. A signal was given and the line of coaches with the clergy moved to Broadway. The band stood waiting at the head of the funeral cortege. Colonel Beck advanced to the head of the line of black horses before the coach. "Move on," were his words, with uplifted sword.

The leaders stepped forward, led by the colored men, and in an instant the black line of horses had straightened their traces and the wheels beneath the remains were moving. The hour was 9:47. The band played a dirge, the tramp of the regulars and honor guard beat upon the pavement, thousands beneath the trees and crowding the sides of the square looked silently on and the black funeral car rolled over the curb and into Broadway.

The corridors of the City Hall were silent. General Grant's last journey was begun. Then at 9:50 Mayor Grace, Comptroller Loew and Aldermen Jachne and Sanger emerged from the hall and entered a carriage that had drawn up in front. The members of the Common Council followed and entered carriages, as did the Police Commissioners. They followed out of the plaza as fast as disposed of in carriages, and [illegible]

Department of Potomac delegates representatives from Illinois, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Ohio, Maine, New Hampshire, Indiana, Vermont, California, Colorado, Delaware, Missouri, and Texas. Veteran regiment associations in three brigades.

So sluggishly did the procession move that the funeral car did not reach Twenty-third Street until one o'clock, and President Cleveland having become tired of waiting, left his open carriage and returned to his room in the hotel, accompanied by Secretary Bayard. Vice President Hendricks followed their example soon after and retired to the reception room on the first floor, where he was surrounded by a crowd of friends.

The President's example was followed by many others who were in carriages and who stepped out upon the sidewalk, which for a time contained a gathering composed of the leading Generals and statesmen of the country.

The catafalque passed Twenty-third Street at one o'clock sharp. The hum of spectators that preceded it was stilled and heads were uncovered. As soon as the catafalque had passed, the carriage containing Colonel Fred Grant and his wife and sister joined it. The other carriages quickly fell into line.

The Congressional Committee and other officers from Washington were distinguished by broad white sashes. Speaker Carlisle and ex-Speaker Randall rode with Congressmen Hiscock, of New York, and Reed, of Maine. One carriage held Congressmen John D. Long, of Massachusetts; Randolph Tucker, of Virginia; Ben Butterworth, of Ohio, and General King, of Louisiana. [illegible]

A RINK WRINKLE.

He was a roller-rinker, and they uttered in his praise
That he bounced upon his cranium in a hundred novel ways;
While she, a belle skatorial, could execute with ease
The circles and the triangles, the scallops and the V's.

He was gliding at an angle when her figure met his eye—
The loving glance she flashed him then he caught upon the fly;
By the way, her eyes were amber, and her frizzes in their curls
Would have paralyzed with envy half a thousand common girls.

He observed her antic graces with coquettish raptures fraught,
And those glances in his bosom their destructive mission wrought;
For they pierced his heart like gimlets, and to prove his feelings fled,
His pedals rose enraptured and he stood upon his head.

So will her: she felt thereafter that her fate in him was found,
Her heart, her head, her boot-heels like love's cart-wheels whirling round;
So with gracefullest confusion—as a blush illumed her face—
With a pigeon-wing she tumbled into "Chawley's" glad embrace.

Then, in their new-born rapture, they flew along the floor
With such rapid evolutions as were never seen before,
And as each novel figure was thus conceived and found,
By Cupid in those tangles their quivering heart-strings bound.

Away they dashed with ardor in half a million ways—
While slower mortals watched them in stupefied amaze—
But little knew the watchers that Cupid set their pace,
And gave to each gyration its perfectness and grace.

I need not say he whispered, you know how 'tis yourself,
While from her veiled eyewinkers the witching little elf
Fired darts of ardent lightning, electric in their charms,
And nestled like a partridge within her lover's arms.

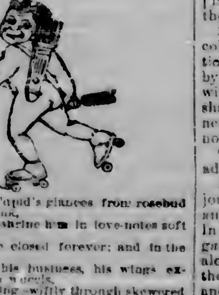
They curved in crazy waltzes, they spun in dizzy reels,
They whirled like great teetotums upon their twinkling heels,
In love-inspired fantastics their ardor never flinched,
The rivet love inserted was driven deep and clinched.

'Twas geometric courting on wheels high polished sped;
They trotted to the preacher's that very eve, and wed;
But knowing well that rollers supply the missing link,
They every eve go whirling adown the roller rink.

You say: "'Twas wondrous sudden, engaged so short awhile?"
Why, bless your simple wonder, that's just the rinker's style!
"And then 'twas very cranky such hasty things to do?"
Of course it was; but bless you, that's rinker's fashion, too.

"You doubt if they'll be happy through but a score of days?"
Oh, well, that matters little in roller rinker's ways.
"They should have thought about it?" Why, dear, they never think;
It's heels, not heads, that govern the modern roller rink.

I simply give the outlines, and just as simply state
This modern fool fantasia and romance of the skate.



No more shall Cupid's glances from rosebud ambush wing,
Or valentines enshrine him in love-notes soft and pink;
Those shops are closed forever; and in the roller rink
He carries on his business, his wings exchanged for wheels,
His arrows flashing swiftly through skewered hearts and heels.
—I. Edgar Jones.

The Widower Danced and His Partner Didn't.

A gentleman living in a village not a thousand miles from Erie, and not altogether unknown here, buried his wife a few weeks ago. Recently, so the story goes, he attended a dance and mingled in the merry mazes of the waltz so long as the man who wielded the baton invoked sweet strains from the fiddle. His business partner, who never trips the light fantastic, was present as a spectator merely. During the evening a lady said to the latter: "Why, Mr. ——, don't you ever dance?" "Oh, yes, some times," was the reply, "but out of respect to the memory of the wife of my partner, lately deceased, I am denying myself that pleasure on this occasion."—Erie Dispatch.

A Welcome Visitor.

"Tell your mother that I am coming to see her soon," said a lady on Austin avenue to Mrs. Silverly's little boy, who was playing in front of the gate. "I am glad you are comin' and ma will be glad to see you, too." "How do you know she will be glad to see me?" asked the lady. "Because I heard her say yesterday she would be glad to see somebody who didn't come here to collect a bill."—Texas Siftings.

The Family Represented.

Smith—Yes, I had to come to take care of my little boy.

Jones—Where's the boy?

A Fashionable Boarding-House.

"What class of boarders have you?" he asked of the landlady while looking at the fourth floor back, "fashionable people?"

"Yes, indeed," she replied. "Some of the biggest bugs in town board with me."—Detroit Free Press.

What He Will Do.

Wife (emphatically)—"That dog of Smith's across the way bit mother again this morning, and I want to know what you propose to do about it."

Husband (brutally)—"I think I will buy the dog."—Chicago Tribune.

—Teacher to little girl pupil: "Where are you going, Nell?" "Papa is going to take us to Florida again." "Can you tell what the capital of Florida is?" "Yes'm. It's the money they get from boarders."—N. Y. Sun.

—No, Themistocles, no, there isn't much in a name after all. That which you fondly and proudly call an "article" is just as liable to go into the waste-basket as that which the managing editor call "stuff" is dead certain to go into the paper.—Burdette.

—A Kentucky girl was struck by lightning while dressing for her wedding. She recovered in time for the ceremony, and less than six months afterward her happy husband thought that a similar experience had befallen him when he came softly in at the front door about three o'clock one morning.—Somerville Journal.

—Mrs. Sapphira Coon, of Summerville, Ky., obtained a patent on an attachment whereby a woman may hold twelve extra clothes-pins in her mouth, and at the same time keep an animated conversation with the woman in the next yard, thereby saving hours of valuable time.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

—Mother: "Always say 'please,' Bobby, when you ask for anything. Never forget to say 'please,' even to the servants." Father (getting ready to go down town).—"Yes, Robert, my son, bear in mind what your mother has told you, and always say 'please.' It's a little word, my boy, but full of meaning, and the use of it marks the gentleman. Now, wife, my overcoat and hat and be quick about it."—N. Y. Mail.

Erudite grocer (balancing a can of peaches in his hand): "My dear madame, did you know that we really knew nothing about canning fruit and vegetables until the ruins of Pompeii were uncovered, and splendid specimens were recovered, canned over twenty centuries ago?" Snappish lady customer: "No, I didn't know it. But I did know your canned goods were very old. How long before you will have your stock from Pompeii worked off?"—Chicago Tribune.

IT'S AWFULLY SWELL.

Society Ladies Now Carry Their Parasols as the Princess Carried Hers in Ireland.

"The society women of New York are very quick to catch the fashion, especially if it be English," said a well-known English actor, as he stood in front of the Windsor Hotel yesterday, while watching the stream of carriages that rolled toward the park. Nearly every victoria that passed was occupied by one or two ladies, and in every instance they held their parasols in both hands straight up and down in front of their faces and within an inch of the tips of their noses. Their hands and arms were precisely in the position in which a soldier places his when he presents arms. It impresses the observer at first with the idea that the woman is afraid that the parasol will blow out of her hands if she does not hold it firmly.

"Do you see how common the fashion is?" continued the actor. "Well, that is all the result of the Prince of Wales' trip through Ireland. American ladies formerly carried their parasols gracefully and easily while driving, but when illustrated London papers came over here with pictures of the Princess of Wales and her escort driving about the Irish cities, and holding their parasols like flagstaffs, an instantaneous change swept over New York, and within a month all the women were carrying their parasols as the Princess of Wales carried hers. And it's awfully swell, too, don't you think?"—N. Y. Sun.

GENERAL GRANT'S MONUMENT.

A Letter to the Boys, From the New York Tribune

... Will you let me say a word especially to the boys of the United States? Appeals will be made to individuals, societies, to men, to women, to children, for money to help build the monument to the memory of General Grant. I make mine to the boys, giving some of the reasons why they should most of all be allowed to have part in this sweet and noble work.

1. The boys are to be our future citizens and keep the country he saved.

2. He is hero to everybody. But a grand, manly boy comes so very near to what Ulysses S. Grant was in his young life that their hands should bring offerings as next of kin.

3. Because after giving of their own money, they will put themselves in an attitude of love toward his memory, thereby adopting his rules and method of life; his patience, sweetness of temper, his loyalty to friends, above all his loyalty to his country, his courage, his reticence, (I can find from no quarter that General Grant ever spoke ill of another—a grand record) and his indomitable perseverance.

4. Nothing endears a boy to his country so much as to love the hero of his country. Cherish General Grant, then, boys, with all your hearts, now, and all your lives.

5. and last. Because these boys never had a chance to fight under him. There may be a time coming when all valor, all strength, all goodness will be need... None can say. History furnishes crises suddenly. Get ready for life now, boys of the North and South, in that brotherly love that General Grant left you as his greatest gift, and you will best honor him.

So, boys of every State in the Union, from Maine to Florida, and from the Atlantic to the Golden Gate, singly and in societies, send your money; the five cents, the dime, the quarter of a dollar, yes, even the penny, to the office of the Grant Monument Association, No. 146 Broadway, New York City.

MARGARET SIDNEY.

... Aug. 4, 1885.

The Dominion of Canada is in a bad way. A prominent lawyer of Hamilton, formerly a member of the Dominion Parliament, Mr. Irving, declares that it owes a debt which it cannot pay, more than half of which was contracted for building railroads which will never pay expenses, much less pay the interest on their cost, which latter will be a perpetual burden on the people. The public debt amounts now to $52 a head for every man, woman and child in Canada, which is about two and a half times heavier per capita than that of the United States. Mr. Irving alleges that the financial reports of the Dominion are "doctored" and that its expenses are exceeding its revenue by about $2,000,000 per annum.

No better or more faithful illustrations of the best type of the American citizen, says the Chicago Journal, could be cited from either the living or the dead than were Lincoln, Garfield and Grant. Though entirely unlike in appearance and temperament, they were nevertheless representative Americans in their instincts and in all the elements of robust and honorable manhood and patriotism. Their boyhood was one of poverty, their early manhood a struggle, their success in life the result of honorable perseverance. The typical American is "the architect of his own fortune," and those three were in a most literal sense the architects not only of their own fortunes, but of the destinies of their country and humanity.

The feeling in Lower Canada over Riel's conviction and the counter demonstrations it gives rise to among the people of Upper Canada, threaten political quarrels of unusual violence. The French Canadians appear determined to put to the test their assertion that the Government dare not allow Riel to be executed, and the Orangemen on their side are preparing to bring to bear all the pressure they can to prevent a reprieve.

The legislature of Massachusetts, at its late session, passed an act which has now gone into effect authorizing the formation of cremation corporations. This act provides that any five or more persons may form such a corporation, with a capital of not less than $5,000 nor more than $50,000, and the par value of shares may be not less than $10 nor more than $50. Buildings, appliances, and locations shall be subject to approval by the state board of health, which board shall also have a supervision over the business methods of the company. The act forbids cremation until at least 48 hours have elapsed after death, except when the death is from contagious or infectious disease. A certificate from the medical examiner of the district must be furnished in all cases, certifying that no further examination or judicial inquiry is necessary. Having thus acquired legalization, the process may proceed. Under this law steps are being taken to organize crematory associations in Boston and some other cities of the state with prospects of success. The agitation of the subject is leading to its favorable consideration by the public, the sanitarians and medical men notably pronouncing in its favor.

Never Give Up.

If you are suffering with low and depressed spirits, loss of appetite, general debility, disordered blood, weak constitution, headache, or any disease of a bilious nature, by all means procure a bottle of Electric Bitters. You will be surprised to see the rapid improvement that will follow; you will be inspired with new life; strength and activity will return; pain and misery will cease, and henceforth you will rejoice in the praise of Electric Bitters. Sold at fifty cents a bottle by Dr. G. W. Crouter.

A Captain's Fortunate Discovery.

Capt. Coleman, schr. Weymouth, plying between Atlantic City and N. Y., had been troubled with a cough so that he was unable to sleep, and was induced to try Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption. It not only gave him instant relief, but allayed the extreme soreness in his breast. His children were similarly affected and a single dose had the same happy effect. Dr. King's New Discovery is now the standard remedy in the Coleman household and on board the schooner. Free Trial Bottles of this Standard Remedy at Dr. G. W. Crouter's Drug Store.

The Fountain of Youth.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food; gases are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy, weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily ease. It produces ... Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS. Take no others. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co., and G. W. Crouter.

MEXICAN ARCHITECTURE.

Nearly all Mexican towns, so far as I have seen them, have features which give them distinct individuality. These proceed from their great diversity in site and climate, from their local building-materials and architectural forms, and from the customs of their inhabitants. For many generations they have been left to their own resources, and this isolation has encouraged those variations. How unlike the growth of the smart towns of our young West, which appear all to have been cast in the same mould, or rather, cut out by the same jig-saw!

There is notable architecture almost everywhere in Mexico. Some of the humblest villages are ennobled by churches whose domes and towers would give them a proud distinction in the greatest cities of our commonplace land. The architectural inspirations of Mexico come from Spain; the art has been transplanted, not developed here. Therefore it shows characteristics of the styles which mark Spanish architectural history. Gothic, however, is sparsely represented, and its influence is seldom traced, except in the light, aerial strivings of some purely Renaissance towers. The Romanesque and Moorish are found underlying the Renaissance, which dominated Spanish architectural thought at the time of the Conquest. The Romanesque influence is manifest almost everywhere in Mexico, and sometimes with striking nobility in almost pure examples of the style. There is also much extremely florid and undignified rococo. Fortunately, this often appears subject to Moorish influence, and in such cases its usual incoherence gives way to a piquant grace.

In Acambaro I noted some charming architectural details. There was an old carved door, weather-beaten and richly wrought in high relief. In the upper part of the two panels large and grotesque twin heads look grimly down, their beards uniting with the ornamental work below. A cherub head peeped out from each of the two upper corners of the doorway stonework, and the figure of some saint occupied the keystone, looking very comfortable beneath the shelter of a rococo canopy. There were some naive reliefs cut in the extremely hard stone of the great basin of the fountain in the market-place, including a series of comical-looking scenes from a bullfight. The bulls and horses were of the size of dogs in proportion to the human figures, perhaps as an indication of the superiority of men to animals. A shapely column stood in the centre of the basin, with a Corinthian capital surmounted by the Mexican coat-of-arms, the eagle, with a serpent in its beak, perched upon a prickly pear. This was painted, and so was the neighboring church. But I can forgive paint in Mexico, except in its stage of tawdry freshness; for one rainy season and the intense sunlight of a few months are enough to tone it down into beautiful pale washes of innumerable tints, the underlying lines perhaps a century's chromatic applications showing through here and there. The church walls and tower were suffused with roseate purple and an exquisite green like that of old bronzes.

The domes of Acambaro were below the average of prominence and excellence prevailing in Mexico, but there were some features of the surroundings of the parochial church which atoned for this defect. The churchyard, which was across the way from a lovely little public garden filled with a tangle of vivid tropical bloom, was deeply shaded by many great ash-trees, or fresnos, which occupy a similar place in Mexico to that of the elm with us—and they fill it well. A low, plain wall surrounded the yard, rising at the entrances into large arches, whose curves were interrupted by arabesque-like notches. The yard was spacious; ample for the processional ceremonies which may not take place in the public streets anywhere in Mexico since they were forbidden by the reform constitution of 1857. The buildings adjoining the church were mostly falling into ruin. A solitary pillar, with the fragments of two arches meeting at right angles springing from it like the branches of a tree, was all that remained of the cloisters which formerly occupied a large quadrangle, at whose corner it stood. The facade of the Capilla del Hospital (Chapel of the Hospital), which fronted on this quadrangle, was of strikingly quiet, simple beauty, fitted to the placid shade of the spot. An unfinished and ruined corner tower was void of all decoration, except the rich setting of a handsome little Romanesque window in its base. There was a tall rectangular surface, flanked by wall-spaces entirely plain, and framed in by projecting lines, on one side beaded and the other fluted. The ornamentation was confined to this space. A purely Romanesque doorway was surrounded by a broad band of rich carved-work, and the entire facade was sprinkled with a constellation of stars, among which large rosettes stood here and there like suns, the whole wrought in a mellow-lined stone of a yellowish brown.—Sylvester Baxter, in July Atlantic.

Senator Sherman's Stage-Ride.

Senator Sherman enjoyed a breakneck ride down Siskiyou Mountain on his stage journey between Redding and Roseburg, Oregon.

The Ohio statesman had pre-empted a seat with the driver to get a better view of the splendid scenery on that elevated divide. The pace from the summit was a tearing one, and the steep, narrow grade made the ride appear particularly hazardous.

The Senator suggested that he could view things better at a slower gait.

"Got to make time," replied Jehu, brusquely.

"I assure you that I am in no hurry at all," exclaimed John, casting his eyes down the precipitous, crooked roadway.

"But I am," retorted the reckless whip, as he let the nags out another notch.

Sherman was scared. He had reason to be. Others had been scared before him, and more are sure to find themselves in the same fix. A second later: "Driver, pull up. I just as leave—in fact, I prefer, to walk down this place."

"No you don't, Senator. I've got three minutes to reach the valley and I'm going to make it or break a leg."

The lively six broncho team sped recklessly ahead, Sherman holding on with might and main.

Turning a sharp curve, the swing-pole suddenly snapped. For a few moments things looked squally. A single lurch might send the coach over a ...-foot precipice.

"Keep your seat," cried the jehu, who with brake and reins quickly brought his team to a standstill.

A little later Sherman was holding the lines, his foot braced on the "hold-back," while the driver was down among the cattle splicing the broken swing-bar.

All was ... ready again presently, and the Senator reassured as to the entire safety of the twelve-mile-an-hour canter down a forty-five pitch grade, kept his place to the bottom without a quiver.

Thinking it over now, Sherman says it was the most exhilarating ride he ever experienced, and he wouldn't mind making the trip overland from California again just to take in that interesting piece of stage route expediting down the Siskiyous.—Helena (M. T.) Herald.

The Homeless.

It is cold dark midnight, yet listen
To that patter of tiny feet!
It is one of your Dogs, fair lady,
Who whines in the bleak, cold street?
It is one of your silken spaniels,
Shut out in the snow and sleet?

No; my Dogs are ... in their baskets,
Safe from the darkness and snow;
All the beasts in our Christian country
Find pity wherever they go,
Those are only the homeless children,
Who are wandering to and fro.

His First and Last Appearance on Rollers.

huge paper bag which he had artfully concealed beneath his coat.

"Look here!" he said, triumphantly. "Ever see so many in your life?"

She gave a little cry of delight.

"Oh, where did you get them?"

"Hush! don't speak so loud. Some one might hear us." He had lowered his own voice to a whisper again. "The old folks sent me to get some meat for dinner. Seventy-five cents! And I spent it all for peanuts!"

He laughed gleefully over the embezzlement, and the old lady gave vent to a funny little bubble of laughter. The sound of her merriment seemed to reassure him, dispelling any latent suspicions he may have cherished concerning her good faith.

"There are some hills over there," waving his long, thin hand toward the north—"where we could go and eat them, and no one would catch us."

She looked up at him gratefully. "That would be splendid," she assented.

For some moments they strolled along in silence, then he broke the silence.

"I once read a capital book if I could only remember the name. I have it—'Crusoe,' 'Robinson Crusoe'—"

"Precisely what I was thinking about," interrupted his companion, pensively. "I could be Robinson Crusoe, and you could be my man Friday."

"Pho! That wouldn't do at all. You'd make a pretty Crusoe! I will be Crusoe, and you shall be my man Friday."

The old lady, who did not seem to be of a combative turn, relapsed into a hurt silence. As they passed a little fruit stand on Folsom street her face brightened.

"We ought to have something else," she suggested. "We should grow tired of nuts."

Her comrade looked gloomy. "Wish I had thought of that. Haven't I got another cent," he added, plaintively.

"Oh, I have plenty of change. I always carry my purse in my reticule."

IN AN OLD GARDEN.

The creeping vine, its tendrils round
The crooked rows of untrimmed box,
Forsaken now, methinks it knocks
To gain admittance to the ground.

Ah, all is waste and desolate—
The blowing firs are full of grief,
The blue bird hidden by a leaf
Sings sorrowfully to his mate.

The scattered flowers alone are gay;
Their fragrance fills the gentle wind,
And I, grown drowsy, dream and find
The long forgotten yesterday.

A GREAT AERONAUT.

An Aerial Voyage Across the English Channel in 1785.

The Famous Feat Performed by Dr. Jeffries, a Bostonian—His Reception in France—French Society as It Was a Century Ago.

The ballooning festival held at Guines recently, was in honor of Jean Pierre Blanchard and Dr. John Jeffries who, on the 7th of January, 1785, crossed the English Channel in a balloon. In the January number of the Magazine of American History Dr. B. Joy Jeffries, of Boston, a descendant of Dr. Jeffries, presents an interesting account of this event.

It is not generally known that Dr.

...courteously." Next day—the 8th of January—a dinner was offered to Blanchard and Jeffries, when Blanchard was presented with the freedom of the city in a gold box, "repeated apologies expressing their wish to do the same for me, but could not without leave from the Court."

On the 11th of the month Dr. Jeffries went to Paris, where he called on Pilatre de Rozier, one of the earliest of the aeronauts who some years after was killed by the burning of his balloon. While at dinner "a number of French dames entered the apartment and embraced us again and again, and chanted some verses honorary to our aerial voyage." Then came junketings without number. On the 12th Jeffries and Blanchard went to Versailles and paid their respects to the King. Mme. de Polignac was visited, and the Duchess deigned to receive them, "though she was dressing at her toilet, like a Venus in white muslin, and surrounded by five ladies all in white, who were attiring her—a most engaging, lovely, affable woman." On the 13th Dr. Jeffries was presented to the King, who said to him: "I am glad to see you, sir." He was dressed in black velvet, with a cordon blue star, etc. On the 14th there was a grand presentation in honor of Dr. Jeffries given "by the gents, wits and men of learning," and on the entrance of Blanchard and Jeffries there were repeated shouts and clappings of hands. Benjamin Franklin wrote Dr. Jeffries a letter, and on the 15th he paid Dr. Franklin a visit at Passy. On the evening of the 16th there was a ball at the Societe, Rue Coqueron, Hotel d'Orleans, "where I was received by universal and continuous shouts and claps of applause, embraced, and complimented by hundreds of the first ladies and gentlemen in Paris." The doctor seems to have been particularly struck by the attentions of a Mme. de Talaïrac "who, with lovely freedom and simplicité de cœur, told me she was eighteen, had married at fifteen, had an infant, etc.; took affectionate leave of me and engaged me to come and see..."

A STRONG effort is being made to have the grave of Israel Putnam, at Brooklyn, Conn., restored, properly marked and cared for.

IT is estimated that the falling off of the hay crop from that of last year in the States of Maine, New Hampshire and Vermont will be 465,850 tons.

THE census of Jersey City recently taken rewards that city by putting it at the head of the New Jersey municipal column, with a population of 153,203—just 400 more than Newark.

THE new directory of Cleveland, O., contains 70,504 names; the directory of the year of the last census, 1880, had 51,624 names—a straw that shows how the lake cities are growing.

THE thermometer reached 120 degrees in the shade in some places in Tulare County, Cal., recently. At Calico, in San Bernardino County, 125 degrees in the shade was reported.

THE reduction of letter postage to two cents has caused a falling off in the demand for postal cards. Since the 1st of July last the sale of cards has aggregated 256,862,750, while for the corresponding period of the previous year the amount was 266,262,250.

ARCHBISHOP WILLIAMS, of Boston, a candidate for the new Cardinalate, was born on the same day, month and year with General Grant, and his friends see a further coincidence in the Archbishop's reticence and his simple, modest and unostentatious bearing.

IT is only natural that San Francisco should become excited over the discovery that an Insane Judge has for several months been trying cases and administering justice in that city. His queer actions in actually sending thieves and plug uglies to jail was what gave him away.

CHARLES EDWARD NEVILLE, the bigamist who had married and deceived fourteen women, died in the Ohio Penitentiary at Columbus a few days ago. Before he died he told the warden his real name was Pensivleski, but he still clung to the claim that he was a Russian Count.

ROBERT B. KENT, SR., died at his home in Louisville, Ky., recently. He was in his seventy-third year, and was widely known in the business world as manager of John Bull's Estate, the extensive proprietary medicine house. Mr. Kent's integrity was of the staunch, unwavering kind, and he was universally esteemed. His son, R. B. Kent, Jr., succeeds to his business position.

COLONEL FRED GRANT, in speaking recently of the vast outpouring of the people at New York to offer their tribute to the memory of his father, is reported to have said: "If my father was so much to the world, who barely knew him, you can perhaps imagine how much he was to his family. His official career was not his greatest. He had a side to his life which very few can appreciate."

FIFTEEN years ago a stage-coach coming out of Blackfoot, Idaho, was robbed of five hundred pounds of gold-dust. The robbers were arrested and sent to the Deer Lodge Penitentiary, but they had succeeded in burying the gold, and no one has since been able to find it. Their sentences will expire shortly, and the inhabitants of the town are said to be watching the prison doors carefully to follow them to the treasure when they get out.

THE general improvement to business over the country reported by the local press is, says the Chicago Inter Ocean, most encouraging. The outlook is now for a good fall business. The country North and South was never in a more solid financial condition. Economy and the paying of debts have for two years been the order all along the line, until to-day there is less borrowed capital and more capital idle for want of place for investment than was ever before seen.

YOUNG ladies may find a lesson in the experience of a girl in Stockton, Cal., who sued her lover for breach of promise of marriage. She produced many of his letters extending over a period of several years, and all breathing promises of undying love. Then he brought out a letter written by her to him about two years before, when she was mad, in which she said she would rather marry a yellow dog than him. The result was an immediate verdict for the defendant.

SHORTLY before a recent rain-storm some passengers on a Baltimore & Potomac train, when a few miles from Washington, were amazed to see what appeared to be a ball of fire, as large as a man's hat, rolling along between the tracks behind the train. It passed under the train, and an explosion was heard which jarred the cars, and then a smell of sulphur was noticeable in the train. The conductor united with the passengers, says the Washington Star, in maintaining the accuracy of these details.

"IT is probably true," says a Western man who witnessed the Grant funeral pageant in New York, "that never before, anywhere in the world, have so many noble-looking men been seen together as were in that memorable procession. Many of them were men of middle age, and there was a large representation of gray heads and men of military bearing. They were as intelligent and fine-appearing a body of men as ever marched through the streets of a great city. It was worth going a distance of a thousand miles to witness such a spectacle."

PATENT OFFICE.

Bureau Practically Up With Its Work and Inventors are not Compelled to Wait.

Grasshoppers Doing Immense Damage to Crops in Montana—Dairy Statistics Which Will Prove of Great Interest.

CAUGHT UP AT LAST.

WASHINGTON, August 17.—The Patent Office is steadily working up on the applications of inventors, and many of the causes for complaint against its tardiness have disappeared. It may be said that practically the bureau is up with the demands upon it, and inventors are not required to wait so long for consideration of their cases as they had to a short time ago. The need of more room for the accommodation of its working force is greatly felt. Desks are placed in halls and corridors and every other place where a clerk can work. It is only a question of a very short time before the Patent Office must have better accommodations, and then it is probable the other bureaus of the Department now in the building will have to seek other quarters and let the Patent Office take sole possession. The question is revived every now and then of doing away with the present system of issuing patents and adopting the plan in vogue in England and other countries of Europe of simply registering every application for a patent the same as copyrights, and when cases of infringement occur let the controversy be settled in the courts. It is argued that whenever a patent proves valuable it is always infringed upon and litigation follows. The new system would therefore make no difference with inventors. The principal change would be the doing away with the large force of examiners and clerks here in the Patent Office. Only a small force would be necessary to register the applications for patents. But it is argued on the other hand that if the American system were done away with valuable patents of all kinds would soon become the property of monopolists. Inventors as a rule are poor. They can not afford to go into the courts to have their claims decided. It would be more profitable to sell the claim, and thus it would be the organizations to purchase patent claims [illegible] would obtain possession of everything, knowing that in the long run they would make something more than they paid out, even if they did not strike a bonanza. For this reason it is not thought that there will be any change from the present plan.

Owing to the rumors of injury by grasshoppers in parts of Montana, the Signal Bureau has, at Prof. Riley's request, instructed its agents in the Northwest to telegraph at once observations of injury and movements, instead of sending them monthly as heretofore. Prof. Riley also sent an agent to the field, whose reports confirm previous ones. Not only are there large numbers of this destructive Rocky Mountain species at work, but the common "native" and non-migratory species are also much more numerous. At Fort Buford and the Popular Pine agency the locusts are very abundant, damaging the crops on June 20 during the middle of the day. A large portion of the Rocky Mountain species left towards the east and southwest.

Mr. Miller, Commissioner of Internal Revenue has telegraphed to all collectors who have been receiving transportation bonds, in which the time specified for delivering the spirits at the port of exportation exceeds thirty days, that they were not to receive such bonds after the 15th instant, thus virtually repealing the seven months' clause contained in the circular of January 3, 1885, extending the bonded period. The collectors were further instructed that they are not to approve transportation bonds after the expiration of the period of three years, mentioned in the warehousing bond, thereby shortening the time by one month allowed under circular 283, of January 1, 1885.

The report of the Statistician of the Department of Agriculture for August contains a chapter of international dairy statistics which will prove of great interest and value to all connected with the dairy industry of the United States. It gives the annual exports and imports of dairy products of the country and Canada, of European and other foreign countries, rendered into pounds and dollars from the original measures of quantity and value.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT.

Three Persons Run Down by a Locomotive on a Bridge at Pittsfield, Mass.

PITTSFIELD, August 17.—The details of the sad accident on the Housatonic River Railroad bridge below this town Saturday evening are peculiarly distressing. James Carney, Mary and Bridget Granger, and John Norton were returning from a fireman's picnic, and had just passed on to the bridge as the engineer of the last up train had started to run his machine across to the engine house beyond. The engineer felt the jar as he struck the quartette and returned to the spot as soon as possible.

The two men were dead, but Mary Granger, with both legs cut entirely off above the knees and her left arm severed at the elbow, was alive and conscious. She was at once taken to the Burbank House. She was even then perfectly clear in her mind and told the story of the accident. She said: "We did not see the engine backing upon us until it had struck the end of the bridge. Carney was about in the center, and Mr. Norton and I just ahead of him, while Bridget was a few feet ahead of us. When we heard the engine we ran as fast as we could. I heard Carney scream and knew he had got under the wheels. Ben had in the meanwhile got behind me and was pushing me along on the narrow plank walk as fast as he could. At that moment and his hand fell away from me and I knew that he, too, had been crushed. By this time I was within a foot of the end of the bridge, but just as I went to jump from between the rails the engine wheels caught my dress and I felt a numbness in my legs and arms. I did not know that I had been so badly hurt." The young woman lingered in agony for about ten minutes when she expired. No attempt at surgery was made as it was known that such would only hasten dissolution. Norton and Mary Granger were engaged to be married. Bridget Granger, who barely escaped by jumping, is completely prostrated.

Gold Discovered in Oregon.

PORTLAND, ORE., August 17.—Gold discoveries in Eastern Oregon are attracting miners from all sections of the Rocky Mountains. Developments thus far indicate permanent veins and rich ore. A correspondent of the Portland News, who was sent out to investigate the mines, returned yesterday and confirmed the richness of the mines. The mines were discovered two weeks ago and were sold to Omaha parties for $70,000, and ore enough has been taken [illegible]

BISMARCK'S HOME.

The Mecca of German Statesmen.

There is scarcely anything in the Chancellor's home at Friedrichsruhe except its absolute plainness. Jewish plutocracy may gloat in its playing gorgeous tapestry and bric-a-brac, but Bismarck, after all, is only a poor man. His state appointment is not worth even £3,000; Schonhausen is valueless; Varzin does not yield much, and the estate of Friedrichsruhe, although estimated at £150,000, brings at the most £6,000. It is true that this is no reason why his walls should be whitewashed, why his furniture is of the simplest description, why his art treasures consist of comparatively worthless photographs and paintings of his daughter and his sons, of Moltke, of Cardinal Hohenlohe, of Thiers, of Beaconsfield, of Friedrichsruhe itself. Yet there are several objects of luxury and ease, and others of decidedly historic importance. There is the rich carpet, extending through hall and rooms; the number of chimneys, where, the whole winter through, fires burn perpetually, and an abundance of couches, sometimes two or three in one room. On the chimney-pieces are the bronze bust of Moltke, crowned with a huge laurel wreath, a plaster cast of Charlemagne, and a small copy of Schluter's Great Elector. The dining-room is adorned with the bronze statue of the Emperor, given by him to Bismarck in 1881. But particular mention is due to the bronze imitation of the Niederwald monument, which stands on a fine oak cupboard in the smoking-room. A leaflet is attached to it with the following words, written by the Emperor himself: "Christmas, 1883; the crowning-stone of your policy; a festival which was destined chiefly for you, and which you unhappily were not able to attend.—W."

Not less interesting as a historical curiosity is a small card table in the Prince's study. When folded up it presents on the top board a little inlaid brass plate, bearing the inscription: "On this table the preliminary peace between Germany and France was signed the 26th of February, 1871, at Versailles, Rue de Provence, No. 16." When opened there appears the central round of green cloth with the very candle-spots of yore, when Bismarck and Favre put their names under the treaty. It wanted a good deal of diplomacy on the part of the chancellor to possess himself of it. His landlady of the Rue de Provence obstinately refused to part with it for any consideration of money until the prince at last called in a cabinet-maker, ordering him to make another table exactly similar to that one. When the twins were put side by side the landlady of course decided in favor of the better-looking of the two and allowed Bismarck to carry off the original one.

The prince's own room is not only one of the largest in the house, but everything it contains bears due proportion to the size of its inmate—the gigantic mahogany writing table, the huge inkstand, the quills of immense goose quills and large pencils. Even the far stretching view from the window is in harmony with the discursive mind of the man who is reclining on one of the couches, while giving ample scope to his thoughts. The guest rooms are situated on the first floor. It need scarcely be added that they are distinguished by comfort, ease, and luxury from the Spartan nakedness of the rest of the house. It bodes peace and friendship to the state whose representative is invited to Friedrichsruhe. Here Bismarck puts out the torch of hatred, for the host's duty he considers to be to cultivate under his own roof amity and good understanding. Prince Orloff and M. de Giers stayed there when the difficulties on the Balkan peninsula, between Russia and Austria, were made up. Again, the visit of Baron Courcel, the French ambassador, was the harbinger of the present entente between France and Germany. On the other hand, Lord Ampthill died without having ever seen the chancellor, at least for the last eight months of his life. The moral of this is, perhaps, that when Sir Edward Malet is on his way to Friedrichsruhe we may safely conclude that an anglo-German understanding with a liberal cabinet in Downing street is no longer a contradiction.—London World.

Carlos Angero, the Cuban who fought bravely in the war of insurrection against Spain, and was recently killed in Cuba, was a mere boy, with a boy's rash pluck. He distinguished himself in various ways, so much so at times that he was more than once degraded even by his own chiefs.

The librarian of the British Museum was recently surprised by a visitor inquiring if there were any extant autographs of the Saviour. Another asked for books on the subject of sorcery, and wished to know if there was any man in the room who could raise Beelzebub for him.

When pursued by a swift dog the common gray rabbit jumps about nine feet clear on level ground. In proportion to length, a horse, to jump as far as a rabbit, would have to clear sixty-four feet at a jump. There is no quadruped that has such powerful muscles in his quarters as the rabbit, and none excel him in the muscles of his loin and back.

Some people are born exceedingly lucky, as is shown in the case of a man from Hartford Conn., who about five years ago, with a few hundred dollars, went to Kansas City and bought a small strip of land which afterward proved to be a sand bed. He bought a horse and cart and hired some shovelers; to-day his fortune is over a quarter of a million dollars.

"West Virginia," says a Wheeling paper, "sports a lawyer who sued a dead man, got judgment, issued an execution, advertised his property, sold it, got the money, and spent the money for whisky before the court was apprised of his death."

The language of letter-seals is the latest. A seal of pink wax means congratulations; one of black, condolence; of blue, love; of purple, friendship; of red, business, and an invitation to a wedding or other festivity is sealed with white wax.

An entry in Washington's diary, dated February, 1768, shows the great number of visitors he entertained at that time. "Would any person believe," he says, "that with 101 cows actually reported at a late enumeration of my cattle I should still be obliged to buy butter?"

Five out of the twenty-one Presidents of the United States were of Scotch-Irish lineage—Jackson, Polk Buchanan, Johnson and Arthur; two of Scotch—Grant and Hayes; one of Welsh—Jefferson, and one of Dutch—Van Buren; the remaining twelve being of English descent.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY.

Mr. Nasby and His Friends Are Disgusted About the President's Summer Vacation.

[From the Toledo Blade.]

CONFEDERIT X ROADS, (Wich is in the State uv Kentucky,) Orgust 4, 1885.

The noosepaper wich comes to the Dimocrisy uv the Corners is the mubile [illegible] wich connex us with the world. The party hez alluz taken one noosepaper, desirin to be intellegent. I reed it to the rest uv 'em, interspersin the noose with origlnel remarks by myself. Ther wood be more papers taken by us ef mere uv us cood reed. Ignerence is to be deplored, but it hez sum pints in its favor. Possibly ef more uv the Dimocrisy uv the Corners cood reed ther wooden't be so many Dimocrats.

The paper come yesterday, and the fust paragraff wich I opened onto wuz to the effeck that the President wuz packin his trunk fur a two months absence in the mountains uv Northern Noo York.

I wich giv all last [illegible] to the [illegible] uv Grover Cleveland, an [illegible] dreethinks at Bascom's, dependin for my likker on the chance invitashens from good-natured strangers wich are too keerlis to notice the tiger-like anxiety with wich I regard em, but

The President is packin his trunk!

The Postoffis at the Corners wich belongs to me by common consent, hez bin held for years by a offensive partisan, one who by his own confeshun, wood hev voted the Republikin tikkit, regierly, ef we hed permitted him to vote at all. Grover Cleveland by one stroke uv his pen cood change all this, and make the hearts uv those wich I owe happy, but

The President is packin his trunk!

Bascom turns over the private ledger in wich for all these years he hez kept my account, and sighs like a furnis. He is losin money every day, becoz I hev not the money to pay fur likker, and he not bein able to continner on tick forever, the wheels uv trade is blocked. The removle uv the nigger Lubbock and my appointment wood remedy all this by restorin the equilibrium, but it is not done.

The President is packin his trunk!

Deekin Pogram hez hed his eagle eye fixed on the Collectorship uv Revenoo for years, and hez bin waitin fur it so long that Bascom holds a mortgage on his farm fur all it is wuth. That place is held by a offensive partizan, wich hez votid the Republikin tikkit alluz, nevin gone so fur ez to forse his way to the poles with a loadid revolver, in spite uv our protests. (But his vote wuzn't countid, hallelooyah!) The Deekin sits wild-eyed and sad, longin and waitin, but

The President is packin his trunk!

Issaker Gavitt hez wanted the custom-house sence he wuz twenty-one years old. His servis in the Confedrit army attests his Dimocrisy. He hez waited so long that he hez becum almost idiotic thro hope deferred. He is still waitin, but

The President is packin his trunk!

Wat rite hez the President to desert his post and go away so fur that we wich want the offises hev not the meens to pay railrode fare to reech him? Wat rite hez he to leeve Washington afore exsaminin our papers and makin the changes wich we insist he ought to make? Wat rite hez he to pack his trunk and git out anyhow?

Carryin with him a trunk implies a long stay. I don't pack a trunk when I go away. I scorn a trunk. A black carpet bag stuffed with paper to enshoor confidense at hotels is all I need. But he, forsooth, must pack a trunk!

I am not reckliss, nor hasty, but I warn President Cleveland that this packin uv trunks won't do. He hez dooties to perform, and the Dimocrisy insists that he performs em. We don't keer so much about polisy: we are willin to swallar any dose wich he offers us, but we want the offises. On that question we are iron clad. And we want em now. He can't sine commishuns in the Adirondax, and afore he gets back I shel hev died uv drouth. He must remember that four years hence the Dimocrisy may pack ther trunks. Let him beware. The starved tiger is the most feroshus.

PETROLEUM V. NASBY, (Desperate.)

CIVIL-SERVICE REFORM.

Mugwumps and Democrats—An Experiment Not Likely to Succeed.

The address delivered by George William Curtis, in Newport, before the annual meeting of the National Civil-Service Reform League, was devoted to a discussion of the question whether Civil-Service reform has gained anything under President Cleveland's Administration. Mr. Curtis contends that it has; but he made very hard work of trying to show how and what it has gained. When it comes to pointing out specifically what the President has done for Civil-Service reform, even Mr. Curtis finds every instance he could cite of the President's acting in accordance with Civil-Service reform offset by several instances of appointments made contrary to Civil-Service reform. His special pleading could neither conceal nor evade this fact. Nevertheless, the Post is ready to concede that Civil-Service reform has gained a good deal—in the fact that the President has not dared to make the "clean sweep" demanded by many Democrats, in open defiance of the law. That is, so much may be counted gain for the cause, as it has restrained a Democratic Administration urged by a party hungry for the spoils, from being as bad as the same party would have been twenty years ago, or as bad as it desires to be now. This does not indicate friendship for reform, but fear of the consequences of too flagrantly defying it.

Mr. Curtis claims that Mr. Cleveland owes his election to the Civil-Service reformers in the State of New York. In return for their support, Mr. Curtis points out that the President has made what he claims are reform appointments in the New York custom-house and post-office. The premises and conclusion, even as put by Mr. Curtis, do not prove the Administration sincerely friendly to Civil-Service reform; but only that the President has yielded somewhat to the demands of that wing of his supporters in order to preserve their support hereafter. Against these few appointments are to be noted, all over the country, other appointments of persons whose main qualifications are their partisan services in the Democratic party. Among these appointments are many which are notoriously vicious, and some so flagrantly outrageous that the President has been compelled by public outcry to revoke them, or change the appointees to other places.

Mr. Curtis misrepresents facts when he says that: "self-constituted counselors, assuming to speak for the party, have been totally disregarded." On the contrary, the President in Michigan, and also in other States, has listened to "self-constituted counselors assuming to speak for the party," while he has turned a more or less deaf ear to the regularly elected counselors who were chosen by the party to speak for it. At best, it can only be said that he has made a choice of counselors; and in many cases he has made a choice that can hardly bear criticism.

Mr. Curtis is also wrong when he says: "Satisfactory officers of the opposition party are serving out their terms." While this is true in some instances, in many other instances satisfactory and most excellent officers have been removed, and very weak sticks put in their places. And the general run of appointments has been notoriously made by the favor of the political bosses, just as is usual in the Democratic party, though sometimes a new political boss has been set up. A change of bosses may be—though it is not always—a reform in men; but it is not a reform in principle.

Mr. Curtis is forced to confess that the appointment of Higgins was a flagrant case of violation of Civil-Service reform. But the Higgins appointment is no worse than scores of others of the same sort, of which every State can show instances. When Mr. Curtis says that, if the Higgins appointment shows "recreancy to reform," the New York custom-house and post-office appointments show "fidelity to reform," he gives away his whole case, by acknowledging that the Administration, judged by its appointments, blows both hot and cold, and has no real and stable principles, but is simply balancing, with evident clumsiness, between the two sides of the question. This is exactly what it is doing; and this is one reason why it makes so many mistakes. On the one side it is trying to attach the mugwumps permanently to the Administration party; on the other it strives to retain the old-line Democracy. The experiment of facing both ways at once has never been successful; it always involves and creates strange inconsistencies; and when the Administration tries to travel in opposite directions at the same time the performance is naturally somewhat grotesque.—Detroit Post.

VIRGINIA DEMOCRATS.

The Latest Formal Declaration of the Democratic Faith—The Virginia Platform.

The platform of the Virginia Democrats is interesting only as the latest formal declaration of the Democratic faith. It contains nothing new, but is rather candid in its representation of old heresies. Declaring in favor of "liberal and continued aid to needy and disabled soldiers," the platform contains an appropriate denunciation of the Republican party as an organization of "sectional hate and constitutional heresy." Evidently, the Virginia Democrats are not at all enthusiastic about accepting all the results of the war and inaugurating new policies of Governmental reform to take the place of old issues. They praise Cleveland in rather guarded terms, applauding him for "removing offensive Federal officers in Virginia," and intimate in no vague manner that a continuation of this policy is desired, so that the Administration may not be embarrassed by retaining any offensive partisans in the public service. In this respect the platform savors strongly of the ancient Democratic doctrine.

Jacksonian in regard to the spoils, the Virginia Democrats are eminently Jeffersonian in respect to the twin dogma of State-sovereignty. No doubt their reference to this doctrine was inspired by the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court in regard to the Virginia State debt. The laws which the Supreme Court overthrew were passed not by the Readjusters, but by the Democrats after they gained control of the State Legislature. The late convention was the first assemblage of the Democracy since the Democratic Repudiation laws were set aside by the National Supreme Court, and accordingly the Virginia Democrats felt called upon to declare that they would maintain "the principles of local self-government administered by the States," and carefully limit "the imperial power of the Federal Administration." What do the Virginia Democrats really mean by this sort of talk? The National Supreme Court declared that the Democratic Repudiation laws of the State were repugnant to the Federal Constitution, and therefore null and void. What do the Virginia Democrats propose to do about it? Surely they are not preparing to vindicate the rights of the State by seceding again? Certainly they will not make another armed effort to prevent the execution of the laws of the United States? The Virginia Democrats ought to understand by this time the futility of all such resistance. Indeed, the platform, while embodying the old doctrine, does not intimate that there will be a resort to the old method of enforcing it.

Even the Virginia Democrats have learned something. They believe in State-sovereignty doctrines still, but instead of enforcing them by means of secession they have discovered that they really have faith in "the Constitution and Union of the States," provided "the National Democratic party is their interpreter and defender." In this event there would be, of course, no need to resort to secession to enforce the doctrines of State-sovereignty, and the Virginians are eminently consistent in pledging their faith anew to the Democracy. There is something decidedly humorous, however, in the effort of the Virginia Democrats to display themselves as the only "defenders of the Union" and "interpreters of the Constitution." Outside of Virginia this declaration will start the query how much of the Constitution or of the Union would have been left had Virginia Democrats been the only "interpreters" of the one or the exclusive "defenders" of the other.—Chicago Tribune.

DISASTER.

Under her bonnet I kissed her,
Under her bonnet of straw—
It would not have been strange had I missed her,
For but half of her visage I saw.

A glimpse of her chin and her dimple
And her nose showed its exquisite tip;
And it seemed so remarkably simple
To caress right there on her lip.

And under that mighty poke bonnet
I dived for a moment of bliss—
You may wager your wardrobe upon it,
I delivered a lightning speed kiss.

Yes, under her bonnet I kissed her—
And somehow—the bonnet shows how—
I found 'twas her Boston-bred sister.

JANE'S GRAMMAR.

The Meanderings of the Childish Mind Through the Intricacies of English Grammar.

Little Jane had repeatedly been reproved for doing violence to the moods and tenses of the verb "to be." She would say "I be" instead of "I am," and for a time it seemed as if no one could prevent it. Finally, Aunt Kate made a rule not to answer an incorrect question, but to wait until it was corrected.

One day the two sat together, Aunt Kate busy with embroidery and little Jane over her doll. Presently doll society became tedious, and the child's attention was attracted to the embroidery frame.

"Aunt Kate," said she, "please tell me what that is going to be."

But Aunt Kate was counting and did not answer. Fatal word, be! It was her old enemy, and to it alone could the child ascribe the silence that followed.

"Aunt Kate," she persisted, with an honest attempt to correct her mistake, "please tell me what that is going to am!"

Still auntie sat silently counting, though her lip curled with amusement.

Jane sighed, but made another patient effort.

"Will you please tell me what that is going to are?"

Aunt Kate counted on, perhaps by this time actuated by a wicked desire to know what would come next. The little girl gathered her energies for one last and great effort.

"Aunt Kate, what am that going to are?" —Philadelphia Call.

A Very Effective Hint.

"Don't you think ear-rings would become you?" inquired Kosiusko Murphy of Birdie McGee. Kosiusko had been paying Birdie very assiduous attentions of late.

"O, I don't know," replied Birdie, demurely.

"I suppose the reason you don't wear them is because it will hurt to have your ears bored."

"O, not in the least," said Birdie, with animation. "I've had that done already quite often—almost every evening, in fact, for the last three weeks."

Then Kosiusko reached round to the piano, dragged his hat off the cover, and commenced to fade gradually from the room. He fairly melted away into obscurity, and now a wide chasm separates the gallant Kosiusko and the charming Birdie.—Texas Siftings.

Appropriate to the Occasion.

Featherly is something of a musician and was attending an evening party given in honor of the eldest daughter of the family.

"I would be glad if you would sing something, Mr. Featherly," said the hostess.

"Certainly, my dear madam. Will you suggest a song?"

"Oh, anything that is appropriate to the occasion. I will leave the selection with you."

So Featherly, with that rare tact and discrimination for which he is so justly popular in society, sat down at the piano and sang: "Backward, Turn Backward, O Time, in Thy Flight."—N. Y. Sun.

A Tight Rein Needed if Best Work Would Be Secured.

The reins are the key to the animal's proper handling and development.

What would be thought of a driver on the track with a slack rein and his animal bobbing about?

The simple facts are that a team under a good steady hand will accomplish abundantly more than otherwise.

I speak of this because I am aware that very many do not understand the force that I am satisfied should be attached to it.

The teamsters of thirty or forty years ago, when plowing and wading through our Western sloughs, will remember the difference in getting a team over a bad place, whether they were driven with a tight or a slack rein.

I recollect a little circumstance that occurred over thirty years ago, that elucidates my idea of a tight rein on a horse. It was immediately after the first rail had reached this place, and I had gone into Chicago, in March or April, by rail, and while at the depot a city teamster had his team stuck in the mud, which was plenty, near the platform of the warehouse. There was a large crowd of men and boys looking on, some suggesting one thing and some another, but while the team was a capable one, they had evidently lost heart in their driver and would not pull worth a cent, although they had nothing but an empty wagon, which, for the place they were in, was a great plenty.

I watched him a few minutes and saw his team had lost their confidence in their master by his slack reins and jerking them at the bit and I got down into the mud and asked the man to let me try my hand with his team, which he seemed willing to do. I took hold of the reins, and drew up on them so that I felt of their mouths, spoke sharp to them and after trying to back them and turning them to the right and left, in order to get the forward wheels clear, and give the team an idea that they were not badly stalled, I gave them the word go, still holding on to the bits strong and the result was that they went out of that mud hole, as the boys say, "a-kiting."

Now I am not going to say that tight reins are all that is required in a good teamster, but it will go a long way in that direction.—Cor. Western Plowman.

It is put into the pipes and propelled by the pressure transmitted from the pumps from one station to another. Relays of men follow the scraper by the noise it makes in its progress, one party taking up the pursuit as the other is exhausted. They must not let it get out of their hearing, for if it stops unnoticed its location can only be established by cutting the pipe.—Pittsburgh Post.

NOW Is The Time to fortify the system against the attacks of that deadly disease Malaria, with all its malignant effects. HOTEL BEATS.

A Veteran Clerk's Experiences With Genteel Frauds.

Well-Filled Valises and Their Contents—Hustling Baggage Out of Back Windows—The Expected-Check Dodge.

The head clerk in one of our large hotels leaned over his desk yesterday afternoon and pensively regarded a tall, rather well-dressed young man, who had evidently just received a bluff. The tall young man walked out of the front door and disappeared up the street. A sympathetic reporter approached the clerk and asked in his kindest tones what was the matter.

"Oh, nothing much; just been euchred again by a dead-beat, that's all," replied the gentleman, with a mournful sigh, as he cast a savage glance at one of the colored porters, who chanced to pass by. The porter had done nothing, but the clerk did not feel well.

"Tell me all about it," said the sympathetic reporter.

"There was nothing unusual about it. The case was a common one. The man came here and took a room. He staid four days, and at the end of that time had no money with which to pay his bill. We simply let him go and are out twelve dollars."

"I suppose you hotel men have a hard time collecting the bills of all your guests, do you not?" was asked.

"Yes, we do," returned the gentleman, emphatically, "and it keeps us constantly on the lookout. Even with the greatest care every hotel keeper has to suffer some loss by dead-beats. A man can not always be sharp enough to checkmate their little plots."

"How many kinds of hotel dead-beats are there?"

"There are many different kinds. The commonest is the man who engages board and doesn't have the money to pay for it. Usually a sleek, self-possessed man walks up to the desk and registers his name with a flourish. He has along with him a well-filled valise, or maybe a couple of them. He is shown to a room, and a porter carries up the baggage for him. The man remains around the hotel for probably a week, but one day he does not turn up for dinner. He is also absent at supper, and we don't see anything more of him. Finally we go up to his room, open the valises and find them to contain nothing but a few old clothes and other things not worth more than two dollars. The hotel, of course, has lost the bill, as the man is gone and will never be seen again. This is the trick oftenest played, and usually meets with success.

"There is another version of the baggage racket," continued the clerk, as he took a seat in the office chair, and squared himself for a good talk. "The guest may really have with him articles of value which would readily bring more than his bill amounts to. What he must do is to get that baggage out of the house without the knowledge of the clerks. This is the way he manages. On the day he wishes to leave, he brings down his valises, and leaves them in the baggage room, which is on the first floor, convenient to the lobby. This is done in the day-time, and he tells the clerk on watch that he wishes to have his baggage handy, as he has important business to attend to, and will hardly get back in time to catch the night train going out of the city. When the guest returns at midnight for his valise another clerk, who knows nothing about the arrangement, is on watch. The man simply walks to the check-room, picks up his valises, and goes out. The baggage boy knows no better, and the clerk very probably doesn't see the man."

"I have often heard of men letting their baggage out of a back window by a long rope in order to keep it from being confiscated. Is that trick ever played upon the clerks?"

"Not often. It requires a confederate outside, and then there is too much danger of being seen by some one passing. On the whole, it is not safe, as an inquisitive policeman might nab the goods as soon as they touched the ground. The trick has been tried on us only two or three times. About two years ago a fellow from St. Louis registered here, and four or five nights after a porter saw him gently lowering a big valise from a third story window. I was notified, and grasped the baggage as soon as it touched the ground. When the man found he was caught he offered to pay the bill if I would let him go and say nothing about it. I accepted the offer and have never seen or heard of the individual since.

"We are beaten out of board by a great many men who don't intend anything dishonest when they come here," continued the clerk. "They are traveling through the country on business, and when they stop here conclude to go out with the boys and have a little fun. They run around, drink and indulge in other dissipations until all their money is spent. When it is time to leave they have nothing with which to pay their board. They usually go off vowing they will send the cash by the next mail, but it very rarely comes.

"Last Christmas a young man from Cincinnati stopped at our hotel. He is the son of a well-known Judge in that city, and he was determined to have plenty of fun while in Louisville. He was around the hotel for several days, until he was finally missed. About the same time a gentleman, who roomed next to the young man, complained that his valise, filled with articles, was missing, and diligent search failed to reveal anything of it. Suspicion at once fell upon the guest from Cincinnati. Detective Bligh was called in and given the facts. After a hunt of several hours the missing man was found fast asleep in a bar-room up town. He would not tell anything about the valise, as he was too drunk to talk. We brought him back and kept him until he was sober. He then told that all his money was gone, and he had pawned his valise for liquor. When this gave out, his longing for more was so intense that he took his fellow-lodger's possessions and pawned them also for money with which to purchase whisky. The stolen valise was recovered and returned to the owner, and the young man was allowed to go free, but we did not receive a cent for his week's board."

The reporter remarked that he thought a man might easily go up with a crowd into the dining-room, secure a meal and no one would be the wiser.

"That is sometimes done," was the reply, "but not often. We usually know every man who is a guest in the house. We may not be able to call his name, but his face is familiar. As the guests go up stairs we usually notice them as they pass. Then I make an occasional trip through the dining-room, and if I see any stranger there I watch him and soon ascertain whether or not he is a dead-beat. I will tell you an instance. Some time ago there was a young man who was a traveling salesman for a Main street house. The fellow was drinking, and gradually began to get down in the world. He loafed around our hotel a good deal, and was pretty familiar with the place. One day while dinner was going on I concluded to take a stroll through the dining-room and see how things were getting along. I hadn't passed half way across the room before I noticed this fellow sitting at a table, and the waiter was just taking dinner off the tray for him. He was surrounded by the dishes. I walked up to him, tapped him on the shoulder, and said:

"'How do you do, B.? Did you just come in?'

"'Oh, yes,' he replied very calmly, 'I have only been in the dining-room a few minutes.'

"'Did you register?' said I. 'I do not believe that I saw your name on the book.'

"'No, I didn't,' he answered, confusedly, 'but I will as soon as I finish my dinner.'

"'You should have registered before you came up,' I returned. 'It is a rule in all hotels, and suppose you come down now and do it?'

"'But you don't want me to leave while I am half through with my dinner?' he exclaimed.

"'Yes, right now,' I said, decidedly. 'You must get up and go down to the office.'

"Well, he arose from his chair, left the untasted dinner on the table and went with me down stairs, but he didn't register, for he had not a cent of money. He walked out of the front door, and has not been inside this hotel since."

The speaker relapsed into a kind of brown study as he finished the story, and a dreamy look of satisfaction crept over his face. At length he resumed as follows:

"The wife of that same man tried to beat us once. Last winter a lady came to the hotel and registered as Mrs. B——. The clerk on watch was not aware of her husband's financial standing, and at once assigned her to a room, where she had her supper sent to her. When I came on watch and saw the name on the register, I asked about it, and at once knew that we would not get anything for her board. I went up to the room and found her eating the supper with an air of great content. I spoke to her, told her that I was aware of her husband's inability to pay, and did not think she was doing right to come to the hotel in that manner. She loudly protested that she had no intention of deceiving us; that her husband was to meet her there in two days, and would make things all right. I argued with her, and she finally packed up her things and went to the house of a friend in the city."

"I don't suppose that the members of the gentler sex practice hotel dead-beatism, do they?"

"Sometimes, but their wiles are all of one sort. She emphatically asserts that she had no intention of deception when time of payment comes, but she expected to receive a check from friends. Through a delay in the mail the check did not come, and she is most unfortunately left without funds. She goes on to say that she had just money enough to get here, but the check would have supplied her with sufficient to pay the bill and reach the city of her destination. You can't argue with a woman, and we have to let her go. She leaves protesting that she will send the money by the first mail, but the first mail comes and the money does not."

"Do the dead beats ever grow repentant and afterward send the money?"

"That is all romance. A dead-beat never does, but a man who did not really intend deception sometimes will. Not long ago I noticed a man standing by the water cooler, and his face looked familiar to me. I thought for a moment, and then remembered it was a certain Dr. A., from the country, who had beaten me out of a board bill ten years ago. I walked up to him, tapped him on the shoulder and said: 'How are you, Doctor? I am glad to see you. Are you ready to settle that little bill which you forgot to pay when you went off before?' He blushed and looked confused—I believe the old gentleman was honest—and replied:

"'I remember it well, and I really would pay you, but I haven't any money. I am expecting quite a little sum next week, and you shall be the first to get your money.'

"The poor old gentleman was one of those fellows who are always building castles in the air and expecting something to turn up. He had been off on a lecture tour and was completely stranded. I didn't get a cent from him and didn't expect to."

"Do you ever fire these fellows bodily—that is, kick them out?"

"Well, I have never done so, although I have seen them given a kick on more than one occasion. If such punishment was inflicted oftener there would be less deadbeatism. We find it better, however, to let them go peaceably; they never return after being once spotted, at least until there has been a change in management and office corps."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE FASHIONS.

Novelties in Trimmings and Bonnets—Earrings and Ribbons.

For summer weddings and church service the favorite bonnet is made of white silk muslin, silk crepe de chine, and very often the daintiest, prettiest of capotes are found to have been made by the fair wearer herself.

The capote or cottage shape bonnet, which fits closely to the head, is the favorite form for these dressy, economical little bonnets. The crown is formed by rows of two cords running around the crown, suggesting a spinning-wheel. The top of the bonnet is shirred, or the muslin laid over in folds or puffs as pleases the wearer. A black velvet bow with innumerable small pointed ends completes the ornamentation. Muslin strings are tied under the chin in a large fluffy bow.

Among other successful novelties in bonnets is the use of ruchings or muslin pleatings originally intended for the neck and sleeves of dresses.

Take a wire capote-shaped frame, cover it with coarse white netting (line it with thin white silk. Cut fine crepe lisse ruffling, place two rows, the upper one slightly over lapping the lower one, along the edge of the frame, around the entire hat. For the crown take white crepe muslin and gather it on very full in effect like a Normandie cap. Instead of permitting to stand high on the top of the crown lay it flat. Complete the unfinished edge of the lisse pleatings by a twisted, soft strip of the crepe muslin. The flat part of the bonnet, directly resting on the top of the head, has a full covering of muslin. On the left is placed a bunch of pure white rosebuds smothered in a transparent covering of the muslin crepe. White muslin strings or black velvet ones can be used.

Oriental lace, in black or white, is still worn in rows of plaitings around bonnets. All bonnets have strings of some sort. Only those bonnets which are partly hats are seen without bows to be worn under the chin. If poke bonnets are preferred the peak or gabled front has a bunch of ribbons or flowers stowed beneath.

Flowers and feathers are seen on round hats, but are not considered especially stylish this season. Scarfs of etamine, or rich combinations of color in sash ribbons, have rather superseded them. Pins of gilt and silver pierce the hat fabrics in all directions and are made to supersede all other ornamentations.

Large garden hats are seen on tennis courts, for driving, boating or excursion purposes. Rough straws for such service seem to find most favor. A pretty trimming for a black rough and ready large shade hat is to line the inside with black tulle shirred thickly on. The edge has a binding of black velvet laid on in a flat puff an inch wide. The crown is somewhat peaked and high, with light blue China crepe twisted loosely about it with two loops in front. The use of poppy red crepe produces a favorite and becoming effect for dark complexion and hair. Leghorns in black or white are lined with rows of plentiful laces whose edge near the rim is permitted to protrude in a fringed ragged effect. White hats are seen with the crowns completely covered with loops and ends of black velvet ribbon. The lining is of white pleated lace.

One of the latest fancies in sleeves for thin dresses is to tie them to the arms in puffs with narrow white ribbons. The lower edge of the corsage is finished in a basque composed completely of flat loops of white ribbon, two inches wide, overlapping to the depth of three inches.

In jewelry the short fob chain and the simple ribbon bow worn in a buttonhole, to secure the watch from slipping, is the favorite watch attachment. Earrings are not seen on young married ladies or young girls.

Bangles with dangling coins with Arabic or Greek words cut on them, still abound on the fashionable young woman's arm.

For mourning oxydized silver ornaments are worn and are considered deep enough in color for heavy mourning.

Sash ribbons when used as belts are cut in front and the ends fastened into buckles. The sash is made into bows and ends to be placed at the back or on the left side.

MATE.

Description of the National Beverage of the Paraguayans.

The word "mate," though commonly used by Europeans, and even occasionally by South Americans, to designate the drink itself, is a misnomer, its proper signification being the small, dry, oblong gourd, generally dyed black, and sometimes compelled by bandaging while yet green to assume a fantastical shape, out of which the infusion of the "yerba" itself or "Paraguayan tea" is taken. The leaves of this tea plant, if an ilex may be so denominated, are gathered amid the wide plantations of its growth on the borders of, or within the tropics of, Northern Paraguay, and having been dried by a careful and elaborate process, of which, not having myself witnessed it, I omit the description, are reduced to a coarse, light green powder. With this the gourd or mate is more than half filled, and hot or boiling water poured in upon it. Almost immediately afterward, with as little time left for standing as may be, it is presented to the drinker, who imbibes it through a silver tube, plain or ornamented, from eight to nineteen inches in length: one extremity is somewhat flattened for convenience of suction, the other expands into a bulb, or bombilla, pierced with small holes, which acts as a strainer to the liquid in which it is immersed. The servant who has brought it stands by waiting till the infusion has been drawn out, when he goes to refill it, and returns to present the apparatus to the next of the company in turn, and so on, till after two or three rounds a "Basta," "enough," or "Gracias," "thanks," gives the signal for its final removal. Taken by itself and unsweetened—for those who add sugar to it, or, yet worse profanation, milk, put themselves merely out of court, as incapable of appreciating its merits—this drink is of all light and refreshing tonics that I know, Arabian coffee itself hardly excepted, the pleasantest and most effective. The taste is aromatic and slightly bitter, not much unlike good Japanese tea. But rightly to esteem and enjoy it one should have earned it by a long day's ride in a subtropical sun, and drink it reposing in the cool shade, to feel fatigue pass into memory only, and vigor return with rest to every limb.—Macmillan's Magazine.

HOME AND FARM.

—Paris green and plaster may be mixed in the proportion of one pound of Paris green to half a barrel of the plaster. Be sure and mix thoroughly. —Toledo Blade.

—Turpentine, neat oil and vinegar, equal parts, well shaken together and rubbed on the eggs of the botfly on horses' legs, it is claimed, will kill them after about three applications.—Chicago Journal.

—A Massachusetts man thinks that as a rule farmers use too little seed in sowing down to grass. His formula is half a bushel of timothy, a bushel of redtop and twelve to fifteen pounds of clover to the acre.—Boston Globe.

—When rye is sown for its grain about one bushel of seed per acre is required. If sown as a green crop, for soiling or feeding out green to cattle two bushels or more per acre may be used with good effect.—Prairie Farmer.

—Potted Fish: After any cold fish is boiled, pick it clean from the bones in small pieces, and to a pound of fish add half a pint of cream, one tablespoonful of mustard, one ounce of anchovy sauce and one and a half spoonfuls of ketchup, a little pepper, flour and butter mixed, and make it quite hot in a saucepan and serve.—N. Y. Herald.

—It is conceded that early maturity is the aim at the present day in breeding all classes of stock. To feed profitably for beef, it is obvious that unless a steer gains in weight with every day's feed the food is lost the day he does not gain. To turn food into meat is simply changing its form in order to derive a higher market price.—Rural New Yorker.

—Savory Puddings (for Invalids): Put one ounce of fine rice into a pie dish with half a pint of beef tea or any kind of stock; bake until the rice is well cooked. Boil a quarter of a pint of new milk, pour it on to an egg lightly beaten, stir well together and then mix with the rice; season with salt and pepper, and bake slowly for an hour and a half in a pie dish.—N. Y. Herald.

—In using kerosene, says the American Cultivator, it has been found that a cheap grade of yellow bar soap containing rosin makes the best emulsion, four pounds of soap to one gallon of hot water being used to emulsify one gallon of kerosene. One gallon of this emulsion incorporated into forty-nine gallons of water (or relatively less quantities of each) makes an effective solution, destroying the insects both in the larval and perfect stages.

—Madras Curry: Take two large onions, shred them and put into a stew-pan with a bit of butter; brown them well, cut the meat into squares, put it into the pan in which the fried onions are and brown it also. Then add the curry powder, a little salt, a small piece of cocoanut grated and a quart of rich milk or cream. Put the lid on the pan and let it stew a quarter of an hour or twenty minutes as the meat requires.—Exchange.

—A correspondent in the Country Gentleman advocates live fence-posts in sections where wire is used for inclosures. The method advised is to set either willow or cottonwood cuttings on the line where the fence is to remain permanently soon after the wire fence is first made. "In five years these cuttings will be thrifty trees, averaging five inches through at the bottom, before the old posts decay. The wire can then be stapled to the living posts, the tops cut off five or six feet high, leaving a few small growing branches to keep them alive and growing."

WOODCHUCKS.

How the Pests Are Discouraged in the Eastern States.

The ravages of woodchucks in clover fields and garden patches are so dreaded by farmers that a country boy seldom appeals in vain for a half holiday to go woodchuck hunting. Hunting woodchucks is a sport peculiarly adapted to the tastes of a chronically tired man. All the hunter has to do is to take his station, rifle in hand, at a distance of from twelve to twenty-five rods from the woodchucks' den, lie down in the clover, with the summer wind to fan him, and read a novel, until the game comes coughing and sneezing out of his hole. Just the moment the woodchuck sits up on the heaped-up gravel before the entrance of the pit is time for the sportsman to send a bullet through him. If the first shot is a miss, the hunter doesn't bother his head about getting a second one, knowing that uncontrollable curiosity will speedily tempt the animal out again. His own curiosity is the only thing that will bring a woodchuck out of his hole. Old hunters say that pouring water in is as ineffectual as turning it into a sieve, as the woodchuck is wise enough to build a second story to his house at the bottom of the hole, perched in which he chuckles satirically, while hogsheads of water sink into the sand beneath his feet.

Hundreds of woodchucks are killed by boys and men every year in every country town in New England, but if farmers depended on their efforts alone it would be almost impossible to cultivate successfully small vegetables on any farm remote from cities. To the lazy, awkward farm dog, who is not smart enough to discriminate between the track of an otter and that of a squirrel, is due the credit of keeping in check the worst pest of Connecticut and Rhode Island farmers. It is a distinct breed of cur, self-developed, and is peculiarly interesting in that it hunts no other game but woodchucks, and hunts, as the farmers say, entirely on its own hook. The first-class Connecticut and Rhode Island woodchuck dog is as worthy of description as the flattered setter or pointer. He is usually a short-legged, shaggy haired, medium sized dog, and invariably good-natured, even when slaying his game. After driving the cows to water early in the morning and paying attention to a tramp or two, he sets out for the distant pasture or meadow and attends strictly to business all day. Taking his place behind a big boulder or in a clump of bushes within easy range of a promising woodchuck hole, he waits patiently until the game emerges. Very sagaciously he watches the woodchuck strolling among the nodding clover blossoms and daises until it has reached a distance that assures him that in a rush for the hole he will carrom on his prey. It is rarely that he makes a miscalculation. Having killed the woodchuck, he flings it over his shoulder, trots home, deposits it on the front porch, and sets out for another hunt. He resents all partnership by men, boys or other dogs in his sport. He is the only dog that hunts exclusively alone. It is astonishing the number of woodchucks destroyed in a season by a well-educated dog.—Forest, Farm and Forge.

A PRACTICAL PHILANTHROPIST.

The late Frank Buckland was a naturalist with such a practical bias that he preferred rather to improve the resources of the world than to extend the limits of science. As Her Majesty's Inspector of Fisheries, he was never so happy as when he was trying to increase the list of edible fishes, or peopling the Australian waters with salmon. He was also zealous for acclimatizing animals in England, and for stocking the parks with elands. His utilitarianism made him indifferent to the disgusting side of his experiments in the uses of animal life.

"How can you taste anything so nasty?" asked a friend, who found him eating a piece of salmon at the time of year when salmon are unfit to be eaten.

"It is nasty enough," he answered, "but how can I say so unless I have tried it?"

When the panther in the Zoological Gardens died, he insisted on having it disinterred that he might cook a panther chop and taste it, which he did, and then remarked that "it was not very good."

He records that a horse-flesh banquet gave him a fit of indigestion, and that he could not soften the hard texture of an elephant's trunk, though he boiled it for many days.

In his undergraduated days he turned his college rooms into a menagerie. When his friends breakfasted with him, they found that eating was made a little difficult by the presence of beasts, reptiles and birds.

A friend once met him coming into the college grounds with both trouser's pockets swollen out to an enormous size. They were full of slow-worms, in damp moss, and he explained to his amused friend that this combination of warmth and moisture was good for the worms. They indorsed his remark by poking out their heads incessantly, in the most lively style, while he repressed them with the palms of his hands.

This utilitarian naturalist was as full of tenderness to human beings as he was full of sympathy with the lower animals. One night, while walking from his office, he found a poor servant girl crying in the street. She had been turned out of her place as unequal to its duties, and had no money and no friends nearer than a distant town, where her parents lived.

The naturalist took her to an eating-house, gave her a dinner, put her in a coach, rode with her to the railway station, paid for her ticket and left her in charge of the guard of the train. He did not realize that he had done an exceptionally kind action.

God, life, earth and judgment were present realities to him, yet he was the cheerfulest of men. He seems never to have had a morbid moment. When he lay dying he expressed his belief that God, who was so good to the little fishes, would prove to be equally good to the Inspector of Fisheries.—Youth's Companion.

A Monster Globe.

Detailed accounts are given in the Berlin and Paris papers of a monster movable globe, made of copper, the work of a blind clock-maker, and on the construction of which seventeen years were spent. The globe represents the earth, and like it, turns on its own axis by means of mechanism; an artificial moon moves round the globe in twenty-eight days and six hours, while a movable metal band on which the hours are marked, indicates the mean time in the different parts of the earth. Round the upper portion of this immense globe, which weighs a ton and a half, and whose surface measures 126 feet in diameter, spins a railroad car capable of holding six persons, and which serves to give a better view of the regions of the North Pole. The painting of the globe is done in oil, and necessitated the employment of two men during an entire year. The sun is represented by an apparatus lighted by an intense Drummond calcium light which enables the spectator to watch intelligently the origin and change of the different periods of the day, the early dawn, the twilight, eclipses of the sun and moon, etc.

—Monday night an old bachelor hitched his horse and buggy at the gate of a most captivating young lady and spent an hour or two in the heaven of her presence. He was so wrapped up in ecstasy that on leaving for his home he forgot his horse and buggy and trudged home on foot. If he had been an old widower he would have taken things cooler, turned the horse loose and hitched himself onto the post in order that he might be near his angel.—Americus (Ga.) Republican.

—The prayer-cures are endorsed by the London Lancet, high medical authority, which looks upon them not as miracles, but as purely the effect of the mind upon the body, it being the faith that heals, and not the outside source or object of the faith.

A Campaign Secret Given Away.

In the campaign of 1884 the two candidates for Governor in a "pivotal" Western State arranged for a series of joint discussions. Both men were popular, both of fine appearance and were so well matched in mental force and as orators that the contest between them promised to be a magnificent one. For several weeks the scales balanced evenly.

But one day the brilliant Republican candidate came up ailing. He seemed overcome and spoke listlessly. The next day he was even less effective. Later he was compelled to ask his opponent for a postponement of certain appointments, which was granted. Before the campaign ended he had abandoned the field altogether.

Meantime the Democratic candidate continued his canvass, seeming to grow stronger, cheerier and more effective with each succeeding week. He was elected. One evening in December while entertaining several gentlemen he said:

"I will tell you a campaign secret—which gave me the election. With the opening of my campaign I began caring for my liver. I knew that a disordered or torpid liver meant dullness and possible sickness. I took something every day. When my opponent began failing I knew his trouble to be his liver and felt like prescribing for him, but feared if I did so he might beat me! I grew stronger as the campaign progressed, often making two speeches a day. Even my voice, to my surprise, did not fail me once. All because Warner's safe cure kept me in A 1 trim." Ex-Governor Jacob, of Kentucky, also made a campaign tour under precisely similar circumstances and says he kept up under the exhausting strain by use of the same means.—Rochester Union.

A Laudable Ambition.

"Bobby," said the minister at the dinner-table, "what do you expect to do when you grow up?"

"I'll be a minister, I think."

"That's a laudable ambition, indeed, Bobby. Do you think you will like to be a minister?"

"Oh, yes," Bobby replied. "Pa says you've got the softest job in town."—Exchange.

Especially to Women.

"Sweet is revenge especially to women," said the gifted, but naughty, Lord Byron. Surely he was in bad humor when he wrote such words. But there are complaints that only women suffer, that are carrying numbers of them down to early graves. There is hope for those who suffer, no matter how sorely, or severely, in Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription." Safe in its action it is a blessing, especially to women and to men, too, for when women suffer, the household is askew.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

THE KEILEY EPISODE.

It is not generally known that Mr. Bayard, the accomplished Secretary of State, is a poet as well as a statesman and a diplomatist. Accordingly if the report that he is the author of the following superb verses is confirmed, a good deal of surprise is certain to be expressed and the Department of State is likely to be flooded with congratulatory dispatches from all parts of the country.

THE INQUIRY.

Tell me, ye winged Winds
That round my pathway glide,
Do ye not know some Court
Where Keiley might abide,
Some kingdom quite effete,
Some island o'er the sea,
Where he may rest his pate,
From further scalding free?
... wind from Italy does whisper low
But whisper most emphatically "Oh, No!"

Tell me, thou mighty Deep,
Where ceaseless billows mount,
Know'st thou some Greenland peak,
Some Afric's sunny fount,
Where Keiley yet may find
The office which he lacks,
Where those that rule decline
To show him but their backs?
The waves from Austria forget to flow
And take an affidavit reading, "No!"

And ye, Cook's agents all,
Conducting foreign tours,
Who to the Earth's far ends
The restless traveler lures,
Tell me on all your maps
Is there not some position,
Where Keiley, after all,
May safely plant a Mission?
And all Cook's agencies in tones of woe,
Remark unanimously and promptly, "No!"

Tell me, thou starry-eyed,
Thou Goddess known as Truth,
Must Keiley stay at home
And hide his light, forsooth;
Is there no alien clime
That's smitten with his charms,
That's yearning for the time
That finds him in its arms?
And Truth replies, her tones could not be sweeter,
Replies with beaming smile: "Best try St. Peter!"

BLAINE'S TRIBUTE.

An Estimate of the Dead General and the Place He Will Occupy in History.

During the memorial services which were held at Augusta, Me., the oration was delivered by James G. Blaine, who said:

Public sensibility and personal sorrow over the death of General Grant are not confined to one continent. A profound admiration for great qualities, and still more profound gratitude for great services have touched the heart of the people with true sympathy, increased even to tender emotions by the agony of his closing days and the undoubted heroism with which he morally conquered a last cruel fate. The world in its hero worship is discriminating and practical, if not, indeed, selfish. Eminent qualities and rare achievements do not always insure lasting fame. A brilliant orator enchains his hearers with his inspired and inspiring gifts, but if his speech be not associated with some popular ... his only reward will be in the fitful applause of his forgotten audience. A victorious General in a war of mere ambition receives the cheers of the multitude and the ceremonial honors of the government; but if he brings no boon to his country his fame will find no abiding place in the centuries that follow.

... that counter movements should ensue; that General Grant's primacy should be challenged; that his party should be resisted; that his devoted friendship should be confronted by jealous men in his own ranks and bitter enemies in the ranks of his opponents. But all those passions and all those resentments are buried in the grave which to-day receives his remains. Contention respecting his rank as a commander ceases and Unionists and Confederates alike testify to his powers in battle and his magnanimity in peace. The controversy over his civil administration closes, as Democrat and Republican unite in pronouncing him to have been in every act and every aspiration an American patriot.

THE COMING SPLIT.

The Drift of Events Indicating an Irreconcilable Difference of Opinion Between the President and His Supporters.

The gradual drift of events since March 4 has been in the direction of a split between Cleveland and his party supporters (including the mugwumps) on the one hand and the Bourbon masses of the Democratic party on the other. The things that have so far prevented have been, first, that Cleveland was sharp enough to recognize that the South placed him in office, and to conciliate that section by a liberal bestowal of offices on its representatives; second, from the fact that Civil-Service reform will operate in favor of Democrats in that section, as Lamar recently acknowledged; third, that many of Cleveland's subordinates, from Cabinet officers down, have not carried out his ideas of reform, but have carried out the spoils doctrine so far as they were able; fourth, that the greater portion of the Democratic spoils leaders have not abandoned the hope that Cleveland will be compelled to yield to their demands; and, lastly, the spirit of blind obedience which is a characteristic of the rank and file of the Democratic party.

But the first two of these causes do not have any force in the North; as to the third, Cleveland is bringing his spoilsmen subordinates to account, and lays down the law that the spirit of his Administration is to be carried out by them. The time will soon come when the already privately disgusted leaders will break out in open rebellion to his methods, and the unthinking masses of the party will blindly follow the petty leaders, because they can not understand Cleveland. To them, a change in Administrations means a throwing out of every Republican, no matter what may be the merits of the individual office-holders, and the filling of their places with Democrats. Already there is wide-spread, although silent, disaffection in the ranks, and this is spreading daily. The time will soon come ...

MOTHER'S OLD HYMN.

Through the trembling folds of the twilight dim
I can hear the strain of that grand old hymn
Which mother, whose heart is now still and cold,
Sang amidst her cares in the days of old.

. . . . . .

There was something about it, undefined,
That charmed into quiet the troubled mind,
O'er the bleak hearts breathed with a spirit bland,
Like a warm south wind o'er a frozen land.

And crowning it all with a strange, deep chord,
Like the throb of the heart of the Blessed Lord
That shed through the fainting soul abroad
A sense of the pitying love of God.

The songs of the singers that fame has crowned
In the flood of the years are lost and drowned;
But mother's old hymn, every pause and tune,
With the growth of time has the sweeter grown.

. . . . . .

And it seems not out of the past to come—
An echo only of lips that are dumb—
But down from the home of the glorified
It has always come since the day she died.

We know not the music that spirits hear
As earth is receding and heaven draws near,
But treading death's valley of shadows dim
I ask but to hear my mother's hymn.

—Baltimorean.

THE BLOODY MARK.

A Plain, Unvarnished Story of Remarkable Events.

In an age when scientific men are beginning to recognize the fact that there are certain forces, which, under certain mental conditions, manifest themselves by phenomena hitherto unrecognized or scorned as the result of successful imposture, a tale partaking of the marvelous should need no apology. Such tales, heard at second hand, have hitherto only served to create a pleasant horror. No element of truth has been ascribed to them; they are forgotten as soon as heard. Perhaps the story of an eye- ...

... involuntarily caught up his hand—but I was mistaken. "Nothing," I said in reply to his inquiry; "I thought I saw something on your hand." I remembered this fact, however, later.

The next morning I was awakened by a vehement knocking at my door. It was just four by the clock; the sun had not yet risen. Wondering what this sudden summons might be, I unlocked my door and in stumbled Johnson, muttering and moaning, his appearance indicating an extreme of fright. Falling into an arm-chair he lay back, white, still. Promptly I threw some water in his face, and pressing a brandy flask between his teeth, urged on him a full draught. This had its effect, and he recovered sufficiently to tell me his story.

"Drake," he said, "I—I—I killed my chum."

Horror-struck I recoiled from him, but with an outstretched deprecating hand he continued.

"But, in God's name, not purposely!"

Then, as if the confession had given him strength, he went on:

"That night we had quarreled, and he came for me with a knife. I seized him by the throat, and held him back. God knows I did not intend to do it. In my blind rage and in fear of my life I held him until he fell, a heavy weight at my feet. What could I do? I worked to bring him back to life—did you not notice his face and the mark of my fingers on his throat? Oh, believe me! Believe me! For the love of Heaven, believe me!" he cried, falling before me and bowing his head between his hands upon my knees. And there was a sincerity in his speech that carried conviction of truth—I believed him.

"Johnson," I said, "I believe you. But why did you not tell the truth; you would not have been in danger?"

"In danger? No!" he exclaimed, starting up. "But could I have staid here? Would I not have had to go back to my old life and give up the college life I have so earnestly worked for? I could not have gone elsewhere. So I took the loathsome thing up, and through my open window I stole down over the fields, skulking in the shade, speeding over the moonlit places with all the horror of a guilty man. And I am guilty—now! Then down to the river, and the air-hole, and to see the body drop ...

The Epidemic of Crime.

Whence comes this epidemic of suicides and murders? Recent discussions have named several causes. Hon. T. H. Reeve, of Indiana, charges it to infidel teachings—holding that hopelessness of a future state cripples fortitude for bearing life's ills. Another declares suffering from the universal business depression the cause. A third writer attributes it to increasing insanity, a physician thinks much of the tendency is inherited, while temperance advocates lay the responsibility upon strong drink.

Free-thinkers have committed suicide, but so have orthodox churchmen. Financial straits have beset many, but the wealthy have also taken their life.

Insanity and dissipation have preceded suicides and family murders.

One feature common to almost every such crime challenges attention. Well nigh every report of suicide and family murder mentions the perpetrator as having "for some time been subject to melancholy." Whence comes this? All recognized medical authorities tell us that the fire which consumes the brain is always kindled by derangements of digestion, that good digestion is impossible without pure blood, and pure blood is never known when the liver and kidneys are out of order. Under such circumstances, a preventive should be sought, and for this Warner's safe cure is sovereign—a fact conceded by the best authorities in the land, and it is especially commended by the celebrated Dr. Dio Lewis.—Rochester Democrat.

A WELL-KNOWN New York tailor recently attempted to kill his wife, and subsequently committed suicide. This is evidently not a case of the survival of the "fittest."—Life.

It is said that in England lovers remain engaged from three to five years. The English lover, however, doesn't have to buy ice-cream every week for his girl.—Chicago Tribune.

"She tried her prentice hand on man,
And then she formed the lasses, O!"

"What is woman's worth?" asked a fair damsel of a crusty old bachelor. He did not know, so she said: W. O. man (double you O man). But a woman feels worth little if disease has invaded her system and is daily sapping her strength. For all female weaknesses, Dr. R. V. Pierce's "Favorite Prescription" stands unrivaled. It cures the complaint and builds up the system. Send two letter stamps for pamphlet to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y.

"LOOKING at your drawing inbues me with an artistic fever," remarked Snuyfbe to Miss Lulu last evening. "It ought to, it's sketching," quietly replied Lulu.—Philadelphia Call.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor.
ED. F. PARMELEE, Associate Editor

The choice of Grand Rapids as a site for the state soldiers' home is the best one that could have been made, all things considered. Its central location, the fact that it is the second city in the state and has never been the location of a state institution, and its accessibility from all parts of the state are the factors that go to make it so superior a choice.

Last week Tuesday in executive session of the Board of Regents it was resolved that Thos. M. Cooley, LL. D., be and hereby is elected Professor of History and Dean of the School of Political Science at a salary of $2,200, it being understood that it shall be a part of his duties to give a course of lectures on constitutional law, to be attended by law students of the School of Political Science.

Chicago Journal: Whether Riel shall be hanged is the great Canadian issue. It is to be hoped that the United States Government will interfere in the discussion, on the alleged ground that he once took out naturalization papers in this country, as it has in the cases of other vagabonds and tramps who have ever got into trouble in foreign countries and claimed that they had at some time lived in the United States. The practice is becoming monotonous and is assuming the form of a nuisance.

Last Thursday the Republicans of Iowa nominated Hon. Wm. Larrabee of Fayette Co. for Governor. The choice is judicious and insures a certain Republican victory this fall. Four years ago Mr. Larrabee was up for the same position and came within 59 votes of capturing the convention but was defeated by the fanatical prohibition element. But the true temperance people of Iowa have learned wisdom with experience and have chosen a zealous republican to lead them to victory, whose 16 years in the Iowa state senate have been replete with sound legislation.

The Iowa Democrats at their recent state convention adopted a plank calling for the repeal of the prohibitory liquor law, and denouncing it as unjust and hostile to temperance. And yet certain Ohio and Michigan prohibition leaders are at work to destroy the republican party which believes that prohibition or no prohibition should be decided by the people at the ballot box. What these pretended friends of temperance expect to gain by giving the anti-temperance democracy a clear field is beyond the ken of mortal foresight. The most practical way ever found to further the cause of temperance is where taxation and local option are combined. In Georgia where there is no republican party to destroy, St. John acknowledges the efficacy of such a combination; in the north he allows himself to be made a democratic cat's paw and hypocritically stands for the building up of a political prohibition party.—Lansing Republican.

The census of Dakota is finished and the footings of the returns show, for South Dakota: Inhabitants, 263,165; farms, 59,264; manufacturers, 442; deaths, 1,849; ex-Union soldiers, 5,397; ex Confederate soldiers, 79. The grand totals for the entire Territory are: Inhabitants 415,664, or 306 per cent greater than in 1880; farms, 32,767, 475 per cent greater than in 1880; manufacturers, 1,054, 400 per cent greater than in 1880; deaths, 2,519. There are in the Territory 7,885 ex-Union soldiers and 105 ex Confederates. Dakota has an area of about 96,000,000 acres, or 235 acres to every man, woman and child. In 1870 the population of the Territory was only 14,181. Statistics relative to crops, products, illiteracy and wealth are being prepared for publication. The assessed valuation of Dakota in 1883 was $60,000,000; in 1884, $85,000,000, and in 1885 it is over $100,000,000. The Democratic House of the new Congress will hardly dare to ignore the petition of Dakota for admission into the Union as a State. The pretense that its population is insufficient will no longer justify a refusal to comply with Dakota's request for Statehood. True, she would be a Republican State, but she is not to be snubbed on that account.

The railroad mills of Michigan appear to have suffered by the depression in prices more than the lakeside mills. The difference between water and rail transportation in the marketing of lumber has thus been illustrated. The railroad mills, isolated from any of the great markets, and unable to reach them without long hauls by rail, and often over several different lines, each with its own through or local charges, find it about impossible to realize a profit on lumber after freight rates are paid. In the meantime the lakeside markets are supplying the demand for lumber. This condition of affairs illustrates the position hitherto taken by the Lumberman, that a market well situated for distribution, can successfully compete with any strictly railway rivalry in the lumber trade. A Michigan manufacturer lately remarked, out of the abundance of his own experience, that any man was a fool to own a railroad mill. This was probably putting the matter too strong, but it emphasized the man's view at the time. When there is a revived condition of the lumber trade, and higher prices, railroad mills will again flourish, as they did in 1881-2.—Chicago Lumberman.

The Fountain of Youth.

Dyspepsia is the prevailing malady of civilized life. A weak dyspeptic stomach acts very slowly or not at all on many kinds of food; gases are extricated, acids are formed and become a source of pain and disease until discharged. To be dyspeptic is to be miserable, hopeless, depressed, confused in mind, forgetful, irresolute, drowsy, weak, languid and useless. It destroys the Teeth, Complexion, Strength, Peace of Mind and Bodily ease. It produces Headache, Pain in Shoulders, Coughs, Tightness of Chest, Dizziness, Sour Eructations of Stomach, Bad Taste in Mouth, Bilious Attacks, Palpitation of Heart, Inflammation of Lungs, Pain in the region of the Kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms. Dyspepsia invariably yields to the vegetable remedies in GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS, the great purifier of the blood and restorer of health. In these complaints it has no equal, and one bottle will prove a better guarantee of its merits than a lengthy advertisement. We warrant GOLDEN SEAL BITTERS. Take no others. Sold by O. B. Weed & Co., and G. W. Crouter.

BANK of Charlevoix.

Deposits of TEN CENTS AND UPWARD received. Five per cent interest, payable January and July. We hold large deposits of savings.

REASONS—First, we have $[illegible] in Real Property, held by law to protect our depositors. All State Savings Banks, or other State Banks, offer no security to depositors. Stockholders are not personally liable for deposits beyond amount of stock taken, and that is often fictitious. National banks only secure their bills in circulation. Second, we do not speculate, holding that with our own money it is foolish, and without friends' it is criminal.

TO CONSUMERS

--OF--

FLOUR.

It is a fact that Flour made by the ROLLER PROCESS from Grand Traverse Wheat will make A LARGE PERCENTAGE MORE BREAD to the barrel than Flour which is EQUALLY WHITE, made from ILLINOIS and WISCONSIN Spring wheat which is almost universally No. 2 or rejected, very little No. 1 wheat being ground in either of these states.

WE PARTICULARLY CALL ATTENTION to our FAMILY BRAND made ENTIRELY OF GRAND TRAVERSE WHEAT by the ROLLER PROCESS, to be had of J. L. HURD & CO., CHARLEVOIX and of any other responsible dealer at other points in ¼, ½ or ⅛ Bbl. Sacks, as low as any Flour of equal whiteness in the market. Try it and you will be convinced that the above is a fact. Prices quoted to dealers upon application to—

BROKEN HEADS & HEARTS.

Scenes in an Irish Dispensary Forty Years Ago.

"Docthor, darling!"

"Docthor, I'm here since mornin'!"

"Docthor, let me go, an' the heavens bless you. I'm as wake as a piece of wet paper."

"Glory to your soul, docthor, asthore, an' gi' me something for this thrumblin' I have. I do be thrumblin' always, like a straw upon the water."

"Docthor, I hear a great pain in my foot, sir. I declare I cried that bottle full to-day morning, with it."

"That was a fine physic you ga' me last night, long life to your honor."

"There isn't a bit I ate, docthor, this time back, but what I get a conceit agin' it the minute afther."

"Docthor, I can make no hand o' my head at all, these days."

"Oh, docthor, what'll I do at all with these ears o' mine? I'm partly deaf always, an' when ever I do be, I hear great sounds an' noises, waves dashin' again' the bank, and birds whistlin' an' boo! an' candlesticks; an when I'm deaf entirely, its then I I hear all the bells in Ireland ringin' in my ears."

"Docthor, I have a great express upon my heart."

"That girl, sir, that you saw yesterday evening was bad entirely afther you goin'; Oh, she began screechin' in a manner, that if the priest was at the doors, you'd think he wouldn't overtake her; an' every bit of her so hot, that you'd imagine the clothes would light about her, an' her face the whole time as red as if you threw a bowl o' blood in it."

"Docthor, a' ra gal! Docthor, darlin'; Docthor, asthore! Oh, ma gra hu! Ma grien chree hu, Docthor! an' let me go!"

Such were a few of the eloquent sentences addressed by the throng of patients, without the rails, to Doctor Jarvis, one of the attending physicians to a dispensary in a district of Ireland. Accustomed to the din, he remained with an undisturbed countenance, looking alternately into the haggard, robust, blooming, pale, fair, young and ancient faces that were thrust forward through the wooden rails, and soliciting his sympathy. Two or three young disciples were hammering away at their mortars in different corners, compounding, like so many Cyclops, the thunderbolts of this great dispenser of health or of its opposite. The scene around him was one which might have waked uneasy sympathies in the heart of a novice. On one side was a stout man roaring aloud in the agonies of tooth-drawing; on another, a victim to the same "queen of a' diseases," sat woefully, with hand to jaw, contemplating the torture of the sufferer, and ruminating over his own approaching sorrow; here lay a stripling with bandaged arm and cadaverous cheek, just recovering with a sigh from the fit of syncope which had been induced by the operation of phlebotomy, and there knelt, with sleeve up-turned, a young Esculapius, wounding, with ruthless lancet, the blue vein in the pretty foot of a girl as fresh as a garland. In one corner was an infant squalling and plunging on its mother's lap, in another the leader of a faction discomfited and head broken, lamenting over the recollection of his broil, and groaning for the priest. But all those sounds of woe and suffering saluted the ear of the medical adept with a mere mechanical effect, and he continued to prescribe with a countenance unmoved, amid the twang of iron pestles, the squalling of children, the vociferations of the old women, and the moans of the young, sent out from beneath their hoods, calling each in order to his side, and attending to their wants in turn.

At a door in the railing was placed an able-bodied man, whose duty it was to admit the patients one by one, to see that no more should pass at a time, and to prevent them from loitering on their return.

"Mary Mulcahy!" cried the physician, reading from a ticket which had just been handed in.

An old woman hobbled on crutches to the door. Jerry Duhig (the able-bodied man before mentioned) opened it to admit her. A rush was made by the mob of patients outside. The old woman was flung into the doctor's arms, and Jerry himself was staggered from his balance. But, like a second Horatius Cocles, he arose in his anger, and confronted the invaders in the breach of which they had almost possessed themselves. The physician gave himself up for a lost man when he saw the counter-scarp thus furiously stormed. But Jerry stood his ground. He thrust right and left with his clenched fists until he sent the crowd screaming and jostling back again without the door, with more cause of complaint than they had brought from home. As the old woman returned, Jerry, vexed at the outrage of which she had been the innocent occasion, caught her by the back of the neck, and sent her out at the door, crutches and all, at a rate more rapid than she had traveled since she was a young woman. She tumbled and fell among the crowd, exclaiming, in a tone between surprise and terror:

"Oh, heaven forgive you your sins, you conthrairy man. Here's usage! Here's thrauement!"

The doctor proceeded.

"What is the matter with your head, my good man?"

"A little difference I had, sir, with a naighbor, an' he ——"

"Broke it?"

"No, sir; only he hit up to me about my brother that was transported for night-walkin', an' out o' that——"

"He broke your head?"

"No, sir; only I retorted on him, in regard of his own father that was hanged for cow stealin', an'——"

"He broke your head?"

"No, sir; only then you see he made up to me and call'd me a liar, an' with that I sthruck him, and with that he——"

"Broke your head?"

"Broke my head across."

"Aye that's the point. One would think I was a justice of peace. What is it to me what you fought about? The broken head is all I want."

"Faix, then, I could spare it to your honor now, an welcome."

"Here, take that prescription to the young gentleman in the blue coat that's rolling the pills in the corner.

"Well, my young girl, what's the matter with you? Jerry, mind the door!"

A sudden roar from without proved that Jerry took the hint.

The young patient just addressed was a timid and pretty creature of sixteen, who hesitated for a considerable time, and glanced shyly on each side, as if afraid of being overheard. Pitying her embarrassment, and interested by her figure, the doctor took her into an inner room.

"Well, my dear," he said, in a kind tone. "What's the matter? Come, don't be afraid of me. I'm your friend, you know." And he patted her on the shoulders.

The girl only sighed and looked down.

"Well, my dear, what have you to tell me?"

"Something that's come over me, sir. I'm in dread."

"How is that?"

"A great pain I have on my heart, sir. There's a boy livin' over, near the Seven Churches, an I'm afeerd he isn't actin' well."

"How so?"

"I don't know, sir. But ever since I met him I feel quite altered some way. I'm always lonesome, an' with a pain mostly at my heart, an' what makes me think 'tis he that done it to me is, because when I go to his mother's an' I find him at home, from that minute the pain leaves me, an' I feel nothin' at all until I come away again."

"Oh, ho!" said the doctor, "well, my dear, I'll order you something; but how is it you suppose that this lad isn't acting well, as you say?"

The girl lifted the corner of her check apron to her eyes and began to cry a little.

"Come now, my dear, don't keep me here all day. I can't cure you if you won't tell, you know."

"I danced with him of a night, sir," she replied in a timid voice and with a trembling lip, "an' when he was sittin' next to me he gave me an apple, an' they tell me now that——"

Here she lifted her apron to her eyes and cried a-fresh.

"Well, well," said the doctor, soothingly, "what then? Don't be afraid of me."

"They told me he put something in the apple, sir, to—to—make a fool of a person."

And, so saying, she hung her head, and drew the hood of her cloak around her face.

"Pooh! pooh!" said the doctor, "is that all? Then you might be quite at peace. Is this boy comfortable?"

"'Tis Harry Lenigan, sir, that keeps the Latin school near the Seven Churches, an' holds his place from Mr. Darner, of Glendearg."

"And have you any fortune yourself, my dear?"

"Fifteen pounds, my uncle left me, sir."

"A very nice thing. Well, my dear, take one of these pills every second night; and I would advise you generally, since you find it relieves your pain so much, to get into company with Harry, to be near him as much as you can conveniently; and come to me again when those pills are out. If Harry should call at your house any time between this and Shrovetide, I would advise you not to be out of the way. Do you hear?"

"I do, sir. Long life to your honor."

"But, above all things, be sure you take the pills."

The girl promised to be careful, dropped a courtesy, and, heaving a gentle sigh, departed.

A loud knocking at the door now startled the physician.

"You're wantin' over, sir, in all haste," cried the harsh and stentory voice of Jerry Duhig, "here's Aaron Shepherd come to call you to see Mrs. Wilderming, that's taken suddenly ill."

This startling announcement occasioned an instantaneous bustle. The doctor's horse was ordered to the door, and he hurried out of the house, leaving the crowd of patients storming at Jerry, and Jerry roaring at them like Dante's Cerberus,

—— who, thundering, stuns
The spirits, that they for deafness wish in vain.

CHARLEVOIX SENTINEL.

SMITH & PARMELEE, Editors and Proprietors.

CHARLEVOIX, : MICHIGAN.

JUDGE T[illegible], of the Superior Court of Con[illegible], daily rides a bicycle.

OVER fifty musical compositions, marches and songs have been put on the market since General Grant's death.

DANIEL WEBSTER's favorite elm at Lower Franklin, N. H., was lately so badly injured by lightning that it was feared it would die.

THE other day Captain J. N. Payton, of New Albany, Ind., resigned the office of constable rather than levy on the few household goods of a poor family for rent.

A MONUMENT to General Grant has been started at Mount Mansfield, Vt., in the shape of a simple pile of stones. Each visitor till dooms-day is asked to add one rock to the pile.

MOSES WILSON, of Springfield, N. Y., set out recently to lift a barrel of cider on a bet of twenty-five cents, and he might have won the money had not his back broken under the strain.

A SERVANT-GIRL at Beatrice, Neb., is said to have fallen heir to $10,000. The freckles have left her nose and she is otherwise wonderfully improved in the eyes of the young men of that town.

THE Sioux City (Neb.) Journal says that a Weeping Water bachelor offers a reward of twenty-five dollars to any man who will put him on the trail of a wife, cash paid when the blushing bride shall be lassoed in due form.

A CITIZEN of Kansas has in his possession the ballot he cast in voting for General Grant in 1868. It was printed on silk, and after it had been kept on file, as the law required, in the office of the clerk, he obtained it, and will hand [illegible]

A GRAY-HAIRED woman of sixty, who was once a reigning belle in Philadelphia, has just been released from an insane asylum in that city, where she had been incarcerated for twenty-seven years as "extravagant" and "eccentric." She is in full possession of her faculties, and, it is claimed, has never been otherwise.

IT is said that the undertaker's bill for Grant's funeral will not be less than $20,000. Five hundred carriages were at the funeral. These were engaged for the day, and this part of the bill will be $5,000. The black horses that were attached to the funeral car were all carefully selected. There were twenty-four of these, and their draping cost $250.

IT is announced that the efforts of speculators to secure possession of General Grant's birthplace at Mt. Pleasant, O., are defeated. So also are all propositions to transfer the house bodily to various cities. The Ohio Department of the Grand Army have bought the property, the veterans will put it in repair, and they propose to erect a State monument beside it.

CHARLES HYELM, a young man who had been a waiter in a Pittsburgh (Pa.) restaurant for two years past, proves to be the son of a wealthy Swedish nobleman, who left his home on account of excesses while at college. Having received a liberal remittance and been promised parental forgiveness, Hyelm has resigned his place as waiter and will rejoin his family in Sweden.

ELI B. PARKER, of Middlebury, Vt., got a letter a few days ago from his soldier son twenty-one years after it had been written. The son escaped from Libby Prison in 1864, had given a letter to a fellow-prisoner about to be exchanged, to forward to his father. In trying to escape, he was torn in pieces by bloodhounds, and the holder of the letter lost his address. He recently sent it to the Adjutant-General's Office, where the identity of the writer was hunted up and the letter forwarded to Mr. Parker.

AMONG the varied expressions of mourning which were hung to the breeze, it is doubtful if there was a more touching appeal to the memory of the great Union General than the few yards of black and white wound about the wire netting which shields the young elm planted by his hand Centennial Day, 1876, at the old battle-ground of Lexington. It was a moonlight scene, ten years ago. After a day of great fatigue and crowded excitement General Grant was detained by the Committee of Arrangements just for a few moments before his departure to leave an autograph(?) this little memento, that we might say in coming years: "It was General Grant who planted it."

EPITOME OF THE WEEK.

The total value of the exports of breadstuffs from the United States for the seven months ended July 31, 1885, was $85,858,932.

THE ST. LOUIS MYSTERY.

Late Developments in the Maxwell Case Favor the Theory That the Dead Body Found Was Not that of Preller.

ST. LOUIS, MO., Aug. 25.—Yesterday's developments in connection with the Southern Hotel mystery have led many to reassert that Preller is not dead, and that the body found in the trunk was that of some man as yet unknown. There is testimony that Preller is alive. A well-known St. Louis drummer says that a few days after the body was found in the Southern Hotel a young man answering the description of Preller appeared at Elston, Mo., organized a singing class, remained a month, and then left without collecting his tuition fees. Before he left he gave a plug hat to a colored man. The hat bore the initials "C. E. P." inside the sweat-cloth. Preller was something of a musician and vocalist. It is believed by many that the reason Maxwell has exhibited such coolness is that he knows that at the right time he can prove that Preller is alive, and that he can not be tried for murdering any other man but Preller. Between the United States and British Governments there is an extradition treaty containing a clause to the effect that the person extradited can only be tried for the offense named in the warrant. This clause was inserted to prevent any Government from extraditing offenders for alleged criminal offenses and then trying them for political crimes. If Preller can be produced at the trial Maxwell can immediately claim his discharge. Then, in order to try him for another offense, it would be necessary for the St. Louis authorities to make another trip to New Zealand, file new evidence, and get leave to begin the prosecution.

BOSTON, Aug. 25.—Dr. E. H. Graham Dewey, of this city, who was a fellow student with Maxwell, the alleged St. Louis murderer, at a college in London, said yesterday that when Maxwell was in Boston he wanted Dewey to get a corpse for him. Maxwell did not say what he wished to do with the body, but Dr. Dewey thought that he wanted it for dissection. Maxwell left the city for a few weeks, and on his return told Dr. Dewey that he had got a "stiff" and wanted him to go and see it. Dr. Dewey was about to inform the insurance companies of Maxwell's doings here when he read the alleged confession of Maxwell that the body found in the trunk was really that of Preller. Ever since Dr. Dewey has been acquainted with Maxwell he believed that his mind was affected.

SPREADING THE FAITH.

Remarkable Success of a Native Mohammedan Against African Pagan Potentates—The Power of Several Rulers Already Destroyed—Belief That American Commerce Will Be Enhanced by These Movements.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—Secretary of State Bayard is in receipt of a communication from Sierre Leone giving an account of the movements of an army of one hundred thousand men in the interior of Africa. The communication, which is from United States Consul Lewis, under date of July 14, says that in 1880 an unusually intelligent and energetic Mandingro named Samudu, a Mohammedan, conceived the idea of waging war upon paganism and of opening up the highways to the coast from the interior. These roads have for generations been infested by vagabond plundering tribes. Samudu began his crusade five years ago, and now has an army of 100,000 men—horse and foot. One division recently drove certain French troops from gold fields which had been taken possession of by the Europeans, and is now besieging Bamaks, a large town occupied by the French. Another division is operating east of Liberia, and will probably make it possible for negro emigrants from America to settle in the healthy and fertile regions of the interior. The third division has subjugated all the tribes in an extensive region. The most important victory secured was that over the kingdom of Soolima, of which Talaba, a large commercial city, was the capital. Last year Samudu's army besieged the city. After a five-months' resistance the King, his family, and the principal chiefs, resolving to die rather than surrender, fired the powder magazine and all perished. The Hooboos, a tribe of robbers who for thirty years had been a terror to caravans, were also broken up, the chief being slain. Consul Lewis is of the opinion that Samudu's success will be of benefit to American commerce, there being an increasing demand in that region for products of the United States.

Indians Taking Homesteads in Dakota.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 25.—The Interior Department has been informed by Inspector Gardiner, who has been assisting the Indians and half-breeds in the vicinity of the Turtle Lake (D. T.) reservation in taking up homesteads on the public lands, that the local land office at Devils' Lake is receiving homestead filings on lands in that locality from half-breeds as citizens. The inspector has been instructed that Indians and half-breeds are not citizens, and can only become such under special laws enacted therefor by Congress. They can take homesteads only as Indians and subject to the restrictions as to alienation provided for in the Indian Homestead law. If they secure patents for homesteads without such restrictions, many, if not all of them, will soon part with the lands and again take refuge upon some reservation as a charge upon the Government. If the Indians patent their lands under the Indian Homestead law they can not part with them for a period of twenty-five years.

Sad Death of a Millionaire's Wife.

NEW YORK, Aug. 25.—Mrs. Mary A. Stuart, wife of Joseph Stuart, a millionaire banker of this city, was instantly killed yesterday at her summer home at Rye Beach. The story goes that Mrs. Stuart was looking in a closet for some toys belonging to her younger children when she came across the breech-loading, double-barrelled shot-gun of her eldest son. She had many times warned the boy not to leave the weapon there, and it is supposed she attempted to remove it to a place of safety when the gun was mysteriously discharged, the load entering the head just behind the right ear, and causing instant death. Rumors of suicide prevailed for a time, but they were unfounded.

Four Fatalities in a Railroad Wreck.

RICHMOND, Va., Aug. 25.—About nine o'clock last night a freight train on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railway ran into another freight train standing on a side-track, seven miles west of Newport News, wrecking both engines. Engineers Spot and Swift and Brakeman George Wheeler were killed. Thomas Holloran was fatally injured, and five other train hands were seriously hurt. An open switch caused the accident. An engine with physicians left here at eleven o'clock p. m. to render assistance. It is reported that both trains are on fire.

Crashed Through a Bridge—A Brakeman Instantly Killed.

ROCK ISLAND, Ill., Aug. 25.—The Rock Island and Mercer County train yesterday morning ran over a bridge near Milan which gave way after the engine had passed, precipitating ten coal-cars into the stream, eighteen feet below. Frank Pearse, of Cable, a brakeman, was thrown down and instantly killed. He was twenty-three years old, and leaves a wife and two children. The heavy rains of the last thirty-six hours had undermined the piers of the bridge and so weakened it as to cause it to give way.

A DISASTROUS STORM.

Portions of the Sunny South Laid Waste by a Cyclone and Flood—Millions of Dollars Worth of Property Destroyed, and the Loss of Many Lives Feared—Other Sections of the Country Visited.

SAVANNAH, Ga., Aug. 26.—At three o'clock yesterday morning a terrible cyclone broke over the city. The wind had been stiffening from an early hour in the evening, and at the hour mentioned had attained a velocity of sixty miles an hour. People in every part of the city were up and dressed in expectation that their dwellings would be blown down. Trees, fences, signs and small missiles were flying through the air in every direction. At the Pavilion Hotel a large tree carried away the roof of the piazza, and burst in the windows and the blinds, creating a panic in the hotel. George W. Parish's warehouse was unroofed. Dennis Shay's large sheds were completely demolished. At the Exchange wharf six or seven small sloops were sunk at their moorings. The trees destroyed number several hundred.

At Tybee Island, at the mouth of the Savannah River, the storm was almost as furious as during the famous cyclone of 1881. The wind reached a velocity of eighty-four miles an hour. The British steamship Marlon, for Savannah, from the Cape Verde Islands, dragged her anchors and grounded in the marsh. She was floated last night. The Savannah steamer St. Nicholas was grounded with forty pounds of steam up and two anchors out. She was floated last night. The pilot-boats Jones and Wilder were grounded, but have been taken off. The British bark N. Mosher, in ballast from Belfast, Ireland, for this port, with all her anchors out, was landed high and dry on the beach opposite Tybee light-house. She has eight feet of water in her hold and her position is very dangerous. The British bark Catherine Chalmers, with mahogany from Mexico for Ireland, is ground at on Tybee Knoll in a very dangerous position. She had put into Savannah for water and provisions. She dragged five miles and lost three anchors. Several small sailing vessels which ply between this city and neighboring islands were seen floating down the river bottom up, and it is certain that many negroes have been drowned. One body has been beached at Schutzen Park. Telegraph wires are down at all points, and the damage done along the coast is unknown. Darien reports no wrecks in that vicinity. On Tybee Island Charles Carroll's summer residence was blown to the ground. His wife escaped just before the building fell. The loss is $3,500. At one of the hotels several windows were blown in and many rooms were flooded by the rain. The people on the island expected to be blown out to sea or drowned by a tidal wave.

SULLIVAN'S ISLAND, S. C., Aug. 26.—The hurricane Monday night and yesterday morning was terrific and destructive. A number of houses on Sullivan's Island were blown away. Over one hundred guests were at the New Brighton Hotel, and fears were entertained for their safety. About nine o'clock yesterday morning the storm reached its height. At that hour, while the hotel people were at breakfast, the Casino fell with a great crash. Fortunately all the rooms in that building had been vacated. It was found that the dining-room and main building would soon succumb to the violence of the storm. At nine o'clock the wind changed from the southeast and the storm increased from the southwest. When the Casino fell it is thought that the maximum of the storm was from sixty-five to seventy miles an hour. The main building of the hotel is intact, having stood the storm without serious damage. At one o'clock it was entirely over. The loss to the New Brighton is $30,000. There has been general destruction of property on the island. It was in the main submerged, but when the wind changed the waters receded.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 26.—Charleston was struck by a cyclone yesterday morning and one fourth of the houses in the city are unroofed, parts of the spires of St. Michael's and St. Matthew's Churches blown down, and the spire of the Citadel Square Baptist Church demolished. The wharves and warehouses are badly damaged. The German bark St. Peters was driven ashore. The German brig Freiheit was sunk in collision. The dry-dock schooner William E. Lee was blown ashore, and the Norwegian bark Verlas and the Italian brig San Frisco are ashore at Castle Pinckney, with a three-masted schooner, name unknown.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., Aug. 26.—At Mayport Monday there was a violent storm. The Atlantic House was blown down. All the guests of the house, about thirty women and children, were exposed for hours to the furious wind and rain. News from Fernandina reports great damage done to buildings, boats and shipping. The guests at the Strathmore House on the beach were driven into town for refuge.

FREDERICK, Md., Aug. 26.—For the third time this summer a heavy storm swept over Frederick County yesterday. The Catoctin River, running through the Middletown Valley, overflowed its banks and carried away everything in its track. Barns, bridges and dwellings were demolished, and fully $15,-000 damage was sustained. Several of the bridges have twice been swept away within the last three months, and much of the loss falls on poor farmers. Considerable damage was done to the growing corn.

BOSTON, Mass., Aug. 26.—A very heavy thunder-storm, accompanied by a gale, prevailed throughout New England Monday night. It was exceedingly severe in Boston and the vicinity, and in the suburbs many houses and other buildings were damaged by lightning.

HARTFORD, Conn., Aug. 26.—A series of extensive thunder-storms passed north of this place and to the east yesterday afternoon, and did great damage to the tobacco crop. The plants in many places were washed out of the ground. Many trees were blown down, and, in some instances, whole orchards were ruined. The damage to the tobacco crop alone is estimated at $150,000.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Aug. 26.—A freshet in Girty's Run Monday night, caused by a cloudburst near Evergreen, Pa., flooded twenty-two houses, washed away thirteen bridges and drowned a large lot of live-stock. The damage will reach many thousand dollars. No lives lost.

SIDNEY, O., Aug. 26.—The rain Monday night and yesterday morning was the heaviest ever seen here. About seventy-five linear feet of the twenty-five-foot embankment of the water-works reservoir went out, leaving the town without water for motive power or extinguishing fire.

Soon to Be Reunited.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 26.—Freeman S. Gargan and wife were, nine years ago, in Saginaw County, sentenced to life terms in the Jackson and Ionia prisons, respectively, for the murder of Charles Smith. They were convicted on the testimony of Smith's widow, who was herself condemned to ten years' imprisonment as an accessory. Just before her death, which occurred recently in the Detroit House of Correction, Mrs. Smith confessed that her testimony against the Gargans was a pure invention. Mrs. Gargan's sentence has been commuted, and it is expected that her husband will soon receive a pardon.

New Laws for Paupers Needed.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 26.—The case of the sixty paupers who were refused a landing at New York, but who subsequently landed at Halifax or one of the Canadian ports and made their way thence into the United States, has been laid before the Treasury Department. Mr. Lyman, chief of the navigation division, says there is no remedy; that the Pauper Immigrant law only applies to landing directly from a ship, and is silent on the question of their coming by land. Congress will be asked to legislate on the subject.

THE SOUTHERN CYCLONE.

Details of the Destruction Wrought at Charleston, S. C.

CHARLESTON, S. C., Aug. 27.—The streets of Charleston were not more desolate after the bombardment during the war than they were two hours after the passage of the storm Tuesday. The storm was a veritable cyclone. It began at daylight, coming from the southeast. The velocity of the wind was twenty-five miles an hour at 1:30 o'clock in the morning, increasing to thirty-five, forty and fifty miles, which was reached about eight o'clock in the morning, finally running up to seventy-five or eighty miles an hour. The northern edge of the cyclone touched Charleston and completed its passage in forty minutes. As early as six o'clock the roof of St. Michael's Church was stripped. At seven o'clock the apparatus in the roof of the signal office was demolished. The last observation before the climax of the storm showed the wind's velocity to be sixty-eight miles an hour.

The News and Courier says of the storm at this hour: "Suddenly the tin on the roofs of the various offices and cotton-sheds were rolled up and scattered like so many rolls of paper, and the waves angrily dashed over the pier-heads and made mountains and valleys in the river. The time of high water was 7:26 a. m. East battery and south battery were practically impassable save by means of small boats. But this was not all. Mountains of waves, as they dashed against the sea wall, were caught up by the wind and tons of water were taken up into the air and hurled against the east fronts of the handsome buildings which line the sidewalks, smashing in the windows, doors and fences and inundating the lawns and gardens. The flagstone promenade of east battery was badly broken up, the waves seizing large flags and pushing them off to the opposite side of the street. Almost the entire railway was washed away, and many gaps were made in the embankment. The damage to the houses, gardens and lawns on this thoroughfare was serious. Not more than two or three houses on either thoroughfare escaped, more of them unroofed, either entirely or in part, and all suffered some damage. The storm continued to increase in violence as the day advanced. The streets were gradually filled up with slates, bricks, signs, window shutters and sashes. At eight o'clock the rain began to fall in torrents. The streets were flooded, and the drain-pits being choked up the water ran knee deep in almost every street in the city. The rain was accompanied by claps of thunder at short intervals, the noise of which was drowned in the roar of the storm.

Hundreds of thousands of dollars were expended on wharves this season putting them in order. The water front on Cooper River suffered least. The Commercial wharves were completely wrecked. Half a dozen yachts, two pilot-boats and a dredging machine were sunk. Boyce's wharf was wrecked and the pilot-boat Schreper and a number of fishing smacks and yachts sunk. Four piers and sheds of the Atlantic wharf were blown away. The Cotton Exchange Building was also damaged. Kerr's wharf was demolished. The steamer Planter was stove in at Accomodation wharf. The damage to the Central wharf was very serious. Four piers and three sheds of Union wharf were swept away. The wharf at Castle Pinckney was carried away. The damage to houses in the city can not be estimated.

The northwestern and central portions of the city suffered slight damage compared with that along the water front, though the entire portion of the city west of Rutledge avenue was submerged with salt water from one to three feet deep. The spire of the Citadel Square Baptist Church, one of the tallest in the city, was blown across the four-story dwelling of Thomas D. Dotterer, cutting away the piazza and front walls, and leaving the interior of the dwelling exposed to the storm. Several miraculous escapes occurred here, but no one was injured. It will take eighty thousand dollars to replace the steeple.

About a mile of railroad track was blown up and freight depots were badly damaged. Two sloops were blown out of the water across the tracks. They weighed thirty and fifty tons each. The South Carolina Railway wharves and Union storehouses were unroofed and badly damaged. One heavy building was thrown on its side and floated one hundred yards away into the marsh.

The Sullivan Island steamers Pocosin and Sappho are aground in the harbor, and considered beyond repair. The Union naval stores and city wharves are badly wrecked. On Charleston's favorite promenade, the east battery, the ground floors of residences were from three to six feet under water, and the handsome gardens were covered deep with sedge. The sea rose so rapidly as to have the appearance of a tidal wave. The steamer Monticello, of the Florida line, encountered the gale twenty-four hours before she reached Charleston. She had a terrible passage, but is not injured. The railroads leading to Charleston are considerably damaged. On the Savannah Road several hundred feet of track was washed away, but the road was in working order again by night. The freight depots of the Savannah and Northeastern Railroads are badly damaged, but the freight in the buildings is uninjured. The Northeastern Railroad track for a mile and a half is covered with water and one half of the track is washed away. Running arrangement have been made with the South Carolina Railway. It is believed that the rice crop is not damaged much. There is no doubt, however, that the cotton crop on the sea islands is seriously damaged. The coastwise steamer St. Helena is ashore at Martin's Point and a canal will have to be cut to get her off. The track of the South Carolina Railroad, from the intersection of the Northeastern Railroad to the South Carolina Railroad wharves, floated all about and was deposited in a zigzag shape on whatever foundations were exposed by the receding waters. The loss to the railroad is estimated at $20,000 at this point.

The News and Courier, makes the following rough estimate of the losses:

Wharf property	$350,000
Private property	320,000
Cotton presses	40,000
Churches	30,000
City property	25,000
Railroads	60,000
Ashley River bridge	8,000
Shipping	10,000
Lumber mills	20,000
Miscellaneous	1[illegible]
Total	$1,123,000

The Flood in China.

WASHINGTON, Aug. 27.—Details of the destruction in Canton (China) and vicinity by the recent great rain-storm there have been received by private parties in this city. The flood was the most serious which has visited Canton in thirty years. More than ten thousand persons lost their lives, and a far greater number are left in a starving condition. Entire villages were ingulfed, and the rice and silk crops in the vicinity were almost ruined. Rain fell the latter part of June, filling and overflowing many of the rivers. The streets of Canton were flooded for over a week. At Hoz Ni City the water broke through the city wall. It is reported several thousand people were drowned in that place.

Important Decision—Entitled to an Increase of Pension.

NEW YORK, Aug. 27.—A Washington special to the World says that Pension Commissioner Black has ruled that two Union soldiers, each of whom had an arm amputated below the shoulder, are entitled to an increase of pension to $37.50 per month under the act of March 3, 1885. This act pensioned soldiers who had an arm taken off at the shoulder joint. The decision also covers, it is believed, all cases of amputation near the elbow, knee or hip joint, where the cut is so near as to render the remaining bone useless.

UNCLE GABE'S VIEWS.

Old Satan laks to come out to de meetin's nowadays,
An' keeps his bizniss runnin' in de slickes' kind o' ways;
He structifies a feller how to sing a fancy tune
When he's trottin' roun' de yaller gals wid all his might an' main;
He puts de fines' teches on a nigger's red cravat,
Or shoves a pewter quarter in de circulatin' hat.
He hangs aroun' de sisters, too, an' greets 'em wid a smile,
An' shows 'em how de white folks puts on lots o' Sunday style;
He tells de congregation, in a whisper sweet as honey,
To hab de benches painted wid de missionary money,
Or to send de Gospel 'way out whar de neckit folks stay,
An' meet de bill by cuttin' down de parson's 'early pay.
His voice is loud an' strong enough to make de bushes ring,
An' he sets up in de choir jes' to show 'em how to sing;
Den he drops de chune 'way down so low an' totes it up so high,
Dat 'twould pester all de angels what's a-lis'nin' in de sky;
An' he makes de old time music sound so lonesome an' gay,
Dat 'twill hardly get beyond de roof—much less de Milky Way;

OLD SQUIDS.

The Story of a Boy Who "Is in a Hundred Mills."

In the days of content, when wants were few and well supplied, when New England rum was pure and cheap, and while the older generation still wore the knee-breeches and turkey-tailed coats of Colonial days, old Bailey, who kept a toll-gate on the Hartford and Providence turnpike, died. For forty years after the Revolution Bailey lived in the solitary little toll-house, near the bridge over the turbulent Quinnebaug, and in all that time had never failed to answer the call to come and take toll; but one night he responded not, and they found him sitting in his chair with an open Bible on his knees, and his spirit gone to the country of which he had been reading.

So it happened that a few days after, the big coach left a tall young man at the Quinnebaug toll house, who brought with him his possessions encased in a handkerchief. The driver of the stage informed the young man that here was the scene of his future activities for the turnpike company, and added, as he saw the young fellow staring at the board fixed to the door on which, at a long distant time, the rates of toll had been painted: "See here, Old Squids, you'd better chalk up some new figgurs. The old ones is about washed out."

The driver called him Old Squids, but aside from the fact that such a surname, if such it was, had never been heard before in that country, it was strange that he should have been called old. He was, in fact, a young fellow, not more than two or three and twenty, seemingly. Though his skin was bronzed, it was smooth, and though his beard was tangled, each hair at cross purposes, it had never known the razor, and was, therefore, silky. He was sinewy, though his joints were protuberant, and his broad shoulders were not erect. Yet, perhaps, they called him old because he was moderate in his way, not so much because of its ness as by inborn disposition.

When the coach rolled away Squids was left standing there, gazing with a perplexed expression at the toll board and abstractedly tugging at his beard. No wonder he was perplexed. There appeared only fragments of words on the board, for the rains had washed the paint away with bewildering irregularity. He could make nothing of it. The very first thing that Squids did, therefore, was to tear down the board and take it into the little cottage. Then, without any examination of his new home, he threw his bundle upon the bed and began to repair the damage that time had done to the board. But age had done its inevitable work with it, and as Squids held it on his knees it crumbled in his strong grasp and broke into fragments, as though the rude change, after forty years of unmeddled security on the door, had been too much for it.

Squids sorrowfully looked at the fragments at his feet, then gathered them up carefully, and gave them a decent interment in an old chest. For a week Squids labored to make a new toll-board. Not that the board itself needed so much time, but, alas, the announcement on it did. For, skillful as Squids was with hammer and saw and nails, his fingers were clumsy with the pencil and paint brush. Hour after hour he worked, studying the printed card of rates which the company had given him, so that he might transfer these figures and letters intelligibly upon the board. One night he even dreamed how it should be done, and dreaming, awoke with delight, lighted his candle, and down on his knees he went, to transfer the dream to the board. But his fingers refused to respond to the picture in his mind, and with a sigh, Squids returned to bed.

At last Squids gave it up. He simply painted upon the board something like this:

man	1 ct.
critters	ask me.

The words and the spelling of them he slyly obtained from some passing stranger who wrote them out for Squids upon a shingle. This new board he hung up in the old place, and when he saw any one, man or beast, approaching the gate, he brought out his tariff card in case anybody should ask him the toll.

The manager of the company passing by in the stage, though he smiled at the board, comforted Squids by saying that he had done well, and then the manager told his companion that Squids was odd, but faithful, and had given proof of his integrity to one of the company's directors. "He doesn't know any name but Squids," said the manager, "and we suppose he is some whaler's waif cast ashore in New London, and left to look out for himself. But he is faithful."

But Squids, while pacified by the manager's approval, was by no means content. "Some day," said he to himself, as he gazed sadly at his rather abortive effort, "I'll put one up that'll be a credit."

Squids seemed happy enough in his lonely home. He made few friends, for his spot was remote from the farms of that town. The stage drivers liked him, for he always gave each of them a glass of cool milk. Squids' only possession, besides his clothes, was a cow.

One day one of the drivers said to him: "See here, old Squids, I've been a-drinking your milk, off and on, a year or more for nothing. What can I get for you at Hartford that will sorter square it up?"

"You might bring me a spelling book," said Squids. "If you'll buy it and bring it I'll pay what it costs; not more than a dollar, I guess."

On the next down trip the driver handed Squids a Webster's spelling book. His blue eyes sparkled as he received it, but he said nothing except to express his thanks. But when the stage rolled away, and Squids was alone, he opened the book, haphazard, and then, standing before the toll-board, said, with an accent of triumph in his tone and the gleam of victory in his eye: "By'mby I can paint one and put it up that will be a credit."

Squids could spell two and three lettered words, but beyond that he found himself mired in many difficulties very often. He struggled and wrestled manfully, but rather despairingly, with the two-syllabled words in the speller. "That's a B," he would say, "sure, and that's an A, and that spells Ba. But I don't quite see this one yet. That's a K, that's an E, and that's an R. K is a K. E is an E. R is an R. Ker. That must be Ker. Baker. Now what kind of a word is that?"

Thus Baker overthrew him, and he was very despondent. One night, as he lay upon his bed, his eyes wide open and his brain throbbing with the misery of the mystery of Baker, a great light came to him. He arose, lighted a candle, and from his canvas bag drew forth ten copper pennies, which he placed conspicuously upon his table. Then he no sooner touched his pillow than he fell asleep.

In the morning the ten coppers were given to the driver, with the request that they should be exchanged at Hartford for ten peppermint bull's-eyes, streaked red and white. When Squids received the bull's-eyes he put them away on a plate in his cupboard and bided his time until the next Saturday afternoon. At that time, about an hour before sundown, he began to peer up the road toward the bend, for it was at such time that he knew that every Saturday a young lad came along with some good things from his father's farm for the minister's Sunday dinner at the parsonage, a mile away on the other side of the Quinnebaug. At last Squids caught sight of the boy, who bore a basket on his arm seemingly heavily laden. Squids, with a slyness born of some sense of shame, concealed himself in the toll house. Soon the lad was at the gate calling upon Squids to come out and pass him.

"Halloo! It's you, is it, Ebenezer, going to the minister's? That basket must be heavy. Should think you'd want to rest a bit."

"'Tis heavy. There's a spare-rib in it."

"H'm. Want to know," said Squids, opening his eyes in surprise and sympathy well simulated. "Come in and sit down. Maybe I can give you something kinder good."

"Now what's that air thing?" asked Squids, when he had Ebenezer in the house, holding up the monstrously tempting confection before the boy's eyes.

"Pepentick bull's eyes," said the boy, delightedly.

"You like 'em. You shall have one." Here Squids seemed about to give Ebenezer the candy, but suddenly restrained himself.

"Hold on," he said. "You've got to earn it. Let's see! How will you earn it. Do! You go to school?"

"Yes, in winter."

"H'm-m. How far have you got?"

"I've got to fractions and second reader."

"Sho! No! I want to know. Now, let's see." Here Squids meditatively produced the Webster's speller from its place under his pillow, and opening it said: "H'm-m. Let's see. Now, here. If you will read that colyoum down straight you shall have two bull's eyes. Right here. Just to see how much you know."

"That's easy," said Ebenezer. "I will read some harder ones."

Squids seemed a little perplexed. At length he said: "Let's try the easy ones first. It'll be so much easier to earn the bull-eyes. Don't you see?" And Squids placed the point of his jack-knife blade upon Baker.

"That's Baker," said Ebenezer.

"Baker," replied Squids, with the queerest accent in his voice. "Baker. Sho! so 'tis." Here Squids abstractedly combed his beard with his jack knife.

"Of course it's Baker. Ker don't spell keer. Anybody but a fool might a' known that. Let me write it down, Ebenezer."

Then Squids, somewhat to the astonishment of Ebenezer, brought forth a shingle, and on the smooth white side, with a piece of charcoal, spelled out the word B-a-k-e-r.

"What do you write it down for, Squids?" asked the boy.

"What for? Oh, only to see how many you get right," replied the cunning Squids.

Thus Squids mastered some ten or twelve words, and the boy received two bull's-eyes, and Squids made a covenant with him that he should stop there every Saturday afternoon and show Squids whether he could read rightly such words in Webster's speller as Squids showed him, for which he was to receive two or more bull's-eyes.

Thus Squids, taught by a bribed and unconscious teacher, mastered the speller and began to make preparations to build a new toll-board, on which he proposed to paint the tariff of prices in a manner that would be a credit.

But something happened that made the new toll-board and the credit that it was to be seem of petty consequence to him. One evening in March, when the fine storm was raging without, Squids, with his speller on the table between two candles, and a shingle on his knee, was painting out with almost infinite pains the word rattle, so that he might be schooled in printing it correctly and as artistically as possible upon the toll-board.

Suddenly Squids paused in his work and listened. There was surely a knock upon his door. That sound was not made by the beating of the oak branches on the roof. Squids took a candle and opened the door. A gust of wind blew the light out, as well as the other one on the table, but Squids had seen a woman's form on the door step, and he put forth his hand and drew her within. He bade her to be patient until he relighted the candle, but before he could do so he heard her staggering step, and then he knew that she had fallen.

When Squids at last with nervous fingers coaxed a spark into the tinder and lighted a candle, he saw that the woman seemed to have sunk to the floor. Her face, over which her hair had fallen and was matted by the rain, was pale, and her eyes, half opened with unconscious stare, seemed to him like the eyes of the dead. Her head, having fallen back, rested against the door. Squids held the candle to her parted lips and saw that she was not dead, but faint, and even before he could apply the simple remedies that he had, she had somewhat recovered. She feebly rose, tottered to a chair, and then for the first time Squids saw that which startled him far more than her unconscious form had done. He saw in her arms the peaceful face of a sleeping infant.

She drank a glass of water, and Squids bustled about to prepare for her a cup of tea, which he made of great potency, so that, having taken it, she greatly revived.

"You're very wet," said Squids, and he threw some logs upon the hearth, urging her to draw near the fire. She did so, but with such manner of indifference that it seemed to Squids that she cared little whether she was wet or dry.

Though he had never touched the smooth, soft flesh of an infant before, Squids gently took this one from her unresisting arms and laid it upon his pillow. The child had not been wet by the storm, and Squids carefully tucked the quilt under the pillow. It did not even awaken under his unaccustomed touch, and as he looked upon the little sleeping one upon his pillow, with a chubby hand resting beside its cheek, Squids vowed that neither mother nor child should leave the house that night.

The woman watched him with the first sign of interest she had shown, and she said at length: "You are kind, very kind."

"That air's a cute little beauty," was all the reply Squids made.

The woman told him an incoherent, rambling story about missing the stage and losing her way, and she begged that she might rest there until the next stage came. Squids urged her to make herself comfortable, and he set milk and bread before her. Then, with cautious respecting the need of thorough drying, Squids went away to the little loft. He listened as he lay upon an extemporized bed, but all was silent below, and when he was assured that the stranger was in comfort he fell asleep.

In the morning Squids knocked at the door, but there was no response. "She is tired; let her sleep," said Squids to himself.

But by and by, there being no sound within, Squids ventured to knock again, and still getting no response opened the door. The room was vacant.

"She went away before I awoke," reasoned Squids, and he set about getting his breakfast.

Soon he heard that which caused him to stop and stand in utter amazement. He did not stir until he heard the sound again.

"Ma! ma!" it came to him once more, and then, gently raising the bedquilt, Squids' eyes met those of the baby.

The little thing put up its hands, chuckled, and bounced up and down upon the pillow. "Ma! ma!" it said.

"Ma! ma!" said Squids; "that means meelly, meelly. It wants milk."

In an instant Squids was warming a basin of milk. "I calculate it'll like it aweet," he meditated. So he put in a heaping spoonful of sugar. Then, with the tenderness of a mother, Squids fed the little one, spoonful by spoonful, till at last it pushed the spoon away with its fat little hands, and, reaching up, clung with gentle yet firm grasp to Squids' long and silky beard, and then tugging away, looked up into his eyes, and laughed and crowed.

"Seems as though it knowed me," said Squids. "I vum the cute little rascal thinks it knows me," and two tears dropped from Squids' eyes right down upon the baby's cheek, and it lifted up one hand, in sport, and as it felt of Squids' rough skin, it brushed away another tear or two with its frolicking. And Squids held his face down to it and clucked and clucked, and spoke softly, with all the instinct of paternity within him aroused. At last the little one's hands relaxed, and its eyelids drooped, and it fell asleep, and Squids stood there watching it, how long he knew not.

Thus Squids had a companion brought to him. He never knew why the mother, if such she was, left the baby there, or where she had gone, and as the days went by he began to have a secret terror lest she should sometime come and claim it. But she did not. No more thought had Squids for the new toll board, only as he set it before the child for a table whereon were gathered the marvelous toys that Squids whittled for it with his jack-knife. Squids early discovered that the baby liked wheels above all things, and that it displayed wonderful cunning in the arrangement of them after he had whittled them out.

One day Squids found him gazing wonderingly at the Webster's Speller, and though fearful of the lawlessness of those little hands, Squids bound the covers firmly together with cords and suffered him to play with the book. Then Squids called the baby Little Speller, and never by any other name. The little one tried hard to say Squids, but could only lisp "Thid," so that Squids came to like this diminutive as spoken by the child better than all other sounds.

"Some day you and me will rastle with this book, and I calculate we'll get the best of it, won't we, sir?" Squids would say to the child when it grew old enough to understand, and the little one would reply: "Yes we will, Thid."

Thus they lived, day by day, Little Speller content, while Squids—his happiness was a revelation of delight of which he had had no conception. By and by, when the little one was older, Squids would take him on his knee, and with the Webster Speller and a new slate brought from Hartford, they would take up their tasks.

"That's A, sir. See how I make it. One line down, so, and another down, so, and one across, and that makes A." And Little Speller, with faltering fingers, would draw the lines and say: "That's A, Thid," and Squids would laugh and say: "We'll have a toll-board by and by that will be a credit, and no mistake."

One day Squids spelled out horse on the slate, and Little Speller took the pencil and sketched a horse with very rectangular head and body and very wavy legs, and he said: "No, that's horse, Thid."

Squids roared, and got a shingle and made Little Speller spell horse in that way on it with crayon. Then Squids nailed the shingle on the wall over the fireplace, and when anybody came in he would point proudly to it, saying: "See how Little Speller spells horse. He's a cute one!"

But before many months went by Squids found that the boy and he were exchanging places, for the teacher was becoming the taught and the scholar becoming the teacher. So Squids sent to Hartford and bought a first reader and an arithmetic, and great was their delight in pondering over the mysteries of these books and solving them.

"Little Speller," said Squids, one day, "you took to spelling natural, but you takes to 'rithmetic more natural. But it's beyond me. After this you'll have to do the figgering and the spelling for me."

That the child had a talent for mathematics and mechanics Squids understood fully, though he could not express it in any other way than by saying: "He's mighty sharp at figgers and mighty cute with the jackknife."

One morning, as Squids was opening the toll-gate, he astonished the traveler who waited to pass through, by suddenly stopping and staring at the house. The stranger feared he had gone mad, or was carrying too much New England rum, till Squids, with triumphant utterance, said: "Look at that air. That's a credit at last," and he pointed to a new toll board, neatly painted and accurately lettered. Then he rushed in the house and brought forth the lad.

"This is the boy that done it," said Squids, "unbeknown to me, and waited her up unbeknown. Ain't that a credit? It is Little Speller, it is."

"Then, when little Speller grew older, he builded, with Squids' help, a marvelous toll-gate, that opened and shut automatically by the touching of a lever; and the fame of it spread, so that the manager even came, and wondered, too, and praised the lad, saying: "Squids, that boy is a genius, sure."

And Squids would watch Little Speller, when the lad knew it not, as an enthusiast studies a painting, and many and many a time did Squids in the night quietly arise from the bed, light a candle, and look, with something like awe in his glance, upon the face of the sleeping boy.

One day there came to the Quinnebaug toll-gate some men, and they drove stakes and dug ditches, and builded a great dam across the river, half a mile above. Then they put up a building larger than any Little Speller ever saw, and placed within it curious machines, and they put a huge wheel outside the building. Little Speller seemed entranced as he watched them day by day, and he caused the men to deal with him with great respect, because at a critical time in setting up the wheel, when it seemed as though something had gone wrong, they heard a little voice shouting peremptorily: "Loose your ropes, quick." and they did so, and the wheel settled properly in place. The men wondered how it was that that little fellow standing there on a rock could have shouted so commandingly that they trusted him. But they said: "He's got some gumption, sure."

When the big wheel was set agoing, and the machines in the mill began to make a frightful clatter, then it was that Little Speller's enthusiasm and delight seemed to be greater even than such a little body as his could contain. He spent hours and hours in the mill watching the machines as they wove the threads of wool into cloth.

By and by Squids saw that Little Speller was silent, dreaming, abstracted, and Squids became alarmed. "It's that air dreadful noise in the mill that's confusing his little head," reasoned Squids; and he urged the boy to go there less frequently, but Little Speller went, as was his wont. At length Squids saw that the boy was busying himself day and night with the jackknife and such other tools as were there, and Squids was pleased, though he could not comprehend what this strange thing was that Little Speller was building. The boy seemed absorbed by his work. When he ate, his great dreamy eyes were fixed abstractedly on his plate; but he slept soundly, and Squids was not greatly alarmed.

"There's something in him that's working out," reasoned Squids, and when he saw the fierce energy and enthusiasm with which Little Speller cut and shaped and planed and fashioned the bits of wood, Squids was sure that whatever it was that was working out of him was working out well.

One day Little Speller said as he put his hand on the thing he had made: "There, it's done, and it's all right. It's better than the ones they've got in the mill, only it's wood."

"What might it be, Little Speller?" asked Squids.

"It's a weaving machine."

"It's worked out of you. Part of you is in that thing, Little Speller, and it's a greater credit than the toll board or the gate."

Then Squids in great glee went and fetched the Superintendent of the mill. "See," said he, when he had brought the man, "that air is worked out of Little Speller. Part of him is in it, and it's a credit."

The Superintendent glanced with some interest at the model, more to please the lad and Squids than for any other reason.

"Show him how it works," said Squids.

Little Speller did so. It was rude, clumsy; but as the boy explained the working of it the Superintendent became excited. He fingered it himself. He worked at it. Great beads of sweat stood on his forehead, for he was intensely interested. At last he said: "That will revolutionize woolen mills. The thing's built wrong, but the idea is there. Where did you get that idea Squids?"

"Me!" exclaimed Squids. "Me! 'Taint me. It worked out of Little Speller. It's been working out of him ever since the mill was built. Ain't it a credit?"

"Credit!" and the Superintendent smiled. "What do you want for it?" he asked.

"I want to see one built and set to working in the mill," said Little Speller.

"Will you let me build it?"

"Oh, if you only will," begged Little Speller.

"Put that down in writing, and I'll promise you I'll fit the mill with them; yes, and a hundred mills."

Squids and Little Speller seemed dazed by this unexpected glory.

"He's going to put what's worked out of you into a hundred mills, Little Speller," said Squids as he looked almost reverentially upon the boy.

It was as the superintendent had said. Seizing Little Speller's idea, he had properly handled it, builded machines, obtained patents therefor, and had revolutionized the woolen mills that were then springing up throughout Eastern New England, and had he opened a mine of gold there on the banks of the Quinnebaug, the Superintendent could hardly have had more riches.

But Squids and Little Speller were content. They would go up to the mill and watch the new machine, weaving yards and yards of cloth, Little Speller with the most ecstatic delight, and Squids with a sense of awe. "That's you, Little Speller. That's you working. It ain't the machine. That's only wood and iron."

By and by Little Speller began to appear abstracted again, and he spent many hours watching the transmission of power from the water wheel to the machinery. "Something more is working out," reasoned Squids, but he held his peace.

One day Squids heard some one coming down the road. He went to open the gate. There were four or five men, and they were bearing a burden. When they were near Squids saw that they moved gently and bore their burden tenderly, and that their faces were very grave. They did not try to pass the gate, but instead entered Squids' little house, and laid their burden upon his bed. Then Squids saw Little Speller's pale face, and a little red thread that was vividly tracing its way on the white cheek down from the temple, and the eyes were closed and the hand hung limp. Squids stood there motionless a long time, then, turning to the men, he said, with dull, phlegmatic speech and a veiled appearance of his eyes: "Was he working it out?"

"He was," said one, "and he forgot himself and got too near the shafting and it——"

"Yes, yes. He was a working it out," said Squids mechanically, and with no intelligence in his eyes. Then suddenly he darted fiercely to the bedside. Little Speller had opened his eyes. He saw Squids and knew him.

"Thid," he said.

Squids bent over him, but could not speak.

"Thid, I shall never work it out," he whispered.

Then he turned his eyes longingly to the old model across the room, and then looked imploringly at Squids. The gatekeeper read his wishes. He pushed the old model up to the bedside. Then Little Speller put one hand upon it, and with the other outstretched till the palm rested gently upon Squids' face, he looked up with one peaceful glance and the flicker of a faint smile, and then the light passed out of Little Speller's eyes forever.

The men saw what had happened and went quietly away, leaving Squids alone with Little Speller.

In the after days Squids would sit by the old model, gently speaking to it, and affectionately causing its mechanism to be put in operation, and he would say: "Little Speller is in there. He is in a hundred mills. You can hear him, but I when I look at this, I can see him, too."—N. Y. Sun.

REVOLUTION IN FARMING.

A New Kind of Irrigation Which Promises Wonderful Results.

A farmer in Alleghany County, New York, has discovered a new kind of irrigation, for which he claims wonderful results. He says he can grow on hill-side land, irrigated after his plan ten tons of hay to the acre, or three hundred bushels of strawberries or raspberries, of a quality superior to hay or berries grown otherwise. His mode is to dig trenches five or six feet deep horizontally along the hill slope, with smaller and less deep trenches connecting these like the rungs of a ladder. All these drains are covered so as not to be reached by the plow. The surface water goes into the main trench near the top of the hill-side, which retains it until full enough to discharge into the next lower trench, through the shallow laterals, or until it is absorbed by the growing plants. This is the foundation of what farmer Cole calls "the new agriculture."

(1) The soil is thoroughly drained thus rendering an earlier and later growth of plants possible, the growing season being lengthened thirty days. (2.) All surface water is avoided, as the water descends to the trenches immediately upon falling, and the subsoil is softened. (3.) There is little, if any, freezing during the severest winter; therefore no loss by heaving of frost (4.) There is a permanent supply of moisture ready to be taken up by plant growth as fast as it is needed. That there is a permanent supply he shows from the fact that the lowest cross drain discharges a pure stream of water in the dryest season. Thus from the dry and barren hillside come perpetual streams and abundant verdure (5.) Fungoid growth (that causes diseases of fruit, and which being carried to the human family by the fruit eaten, causes diseases such as diphtheria, typhoid fever, etc.,) is prevented. It is difficult to find an apple that has not fungus upon its surface, and many other fruits, like strawberries, grapes and gooseberries, are likewise infected. Considering the flow of pure water which Mr. Cole secures from his dry hillside, he asks what would be the result were all the hillsides of the Genesee Valley thus irrigated? Why, he continues, the Genesee would fill its banks continually with the crystal liquid. There would be no drouths, no freshets, no muddy water, as the water would escape slowly from the soil, and be filtered in its descent.

The digging and covering the trenches, and whatever other work may be necessary upon, costs about $500 per acre, but Mr. Cole avers that every acre thus improved is worth $5,000 on account of its increased productiveness.—Burlington Free Press and Times.

—Courtship in Utah—"Well, good night, dearest George; I hope you will reach home safely. Can not you call again to-morrow evening?" "No, dearest. To-morrow evening I go to see Ethelinda." "Well, the evening after?" "Sorry; but that's Angelina's night. It's a fact dearest Aurora. Every night in the week is occupied now, and I have three matinees to do besides. But cheer up, dearest, we'll have a grand wedding some of these days, when I will be able to clasp you all to my heart never more to separate." Then pressing a fond kiss on his darling's lips, the lover takes his departure.—Exchange.

—Lilian Whiting says "sleep is almost a lost art," and suggests that a society be formed to encourage experiments in sleep on the part of American women. If Lilian were to dismiss her young man before 2 a. m. and object to his calling seven nights a week she would get more sleep and change her opinion about the luxury being a lost art.—Norristown Herald.

—The last echoing whack of the skate-strap died away, and the thrilling howl that followed it faltered out in a tremulous sob as the boy emerged from the woodshed, a little wiser and a great deal sadder. "Do not come near me," he said, haughtily, as his sister Ann approached, her lips aquiver with sarcastic condolences. "I bear on my person the burden of royalty; the prince of wails is all over my back." But his sister Ann, with republican simplicity, thought that he had just been catching "hail Columbia." "No," the boy said, bitterly, "it was a skate satrap." He was monarchical to the bitter end; to both ends, in fact.—Burdette.

AN EYE FOR COLOR.

The Colored Man Who Had a Notion to the Artistic Fitness of Things.

Dan. W——, one of our best known and most fashionable scions of Afric's sunburnt race, entered Hill's livery stable, at the Seven Corners, on Monday evening. Some half dozen loungers were holding down the available chairs in the office, thinking about nothing, and occasionally giving vent to the results of their cogitations by word of mouth.

"Mistah Hill," said Dan, "I'se always been a good customah of dis heah stable, haint I? Got all my rigs fo' de las' two yeahs, I b'leve."

"Certainly, Dan," returned Mr. Hill graciously.

"Well, now, I tell you what I done want, Mistah Hill. I'se gwine ridin' wif my gal dis ebenin' an' I want jes' about de tonlest rig you'se got in de shop."

"All right, Dan," said Hill, "your desires shall be fulfilled to the letter. Sam, bring out the white mare and put a gold-plated harness on her. Bill, run out that red-geared side-bar rig there and see that there isn't a speck of dust about it. Now, you Tom, you get that yellow lap-robe with the brown dog's head on it, and that nice ivory-handled whip of mine. You bet, Dan, we'll send you out in such shape that your friends on the Gold Coast wouldn't know you."

The spectators sat silently watching the preparations, while Dan stood polishing up his shiny silk hat, now and then casting an anxious eye at Hill. Finally everything was ready, and, with a hearty slap on Dan's back, Hill said: "There, old boy, just climb into that, and you can bet your life that there won't be another colored girl in St. Paul that will go driving in any such style this week."

"Well, jes' hol' on a minnit, Mistah Hill, said Dan, rather dubiously, "I'se 'fraid dat won't scasely do fo' dis chicken."

"Well, here's gratitude for you, I must say," returned Hill. "Here I swell you out with a rig that half of my white customers couldn't get, and you've got the gall to say it won't do. What do you mean by such talk, anyway?"

"Now, jes' wait a secon', Mistah Hill, till I splains dis thing; p'raps I'se mistaken, an' may be it's all right; but jes' tell me now, hunes', ain't that mare white?"

"Why, of course she's white."

"An' ain't dat buggy red?"

"Certainly it's red."

"An' dat 'ere lap-robe, it's kinder yaller, ain't it?"

"Looks a little that way, I'll admit," said Hill.

"Yes; an' de dog on de lap-robe he looks pretty brown, don't he, Mistah Hill, an' de whip's jes' a little green. Ain't it, Mistah Hill?"

"Why, of course; what of it?"

"Well, it's jes' dis way, Mistah Hill, you see, I'se purty consid'ble black myself, an' my gal—well, she's what you might call a beautiful rich molasses color; an' I'se 'fraid, Mistah Hill, dat a red buggy, wif a yaller robe wif a brown dog on it, wif a green whip, all hitched to a white hoss, wouldn't exackly ha'monize wif a black niggah an' a molasses-kulled gal, Mistah Hill, an' so if you kin jes' kin'ly gimme de ole bay horse an' de black buggy, I specs it would mo' kinder ha'monize wif my ecstatic taste, Mistah Hill."

Mr. Hill admitted his mistake, and the gentleman was provided with what he wished, and drove off amidst the applause of the spectators. Hill has determined to take up the study of color as applied to out-door decoration before proceeding any farther with the livery business.—St. Paul Herald.

READING FOR THE YOUNG.

HAPPY AS A KING.

"I'd like to know why I should frown,"
Sang sunny-hearted Joe;
"I think of the [illegible] never might
I look at the [illegible] clouded sky
I hark to the brook [illegible] ripples by,
And happy as a king—
Oh, ho!—
I whistle and I sing.

"I'd like to know why I should mope,"
Sang sunny-hearted Joe.
"The flowers are smiling all day long;
The cricket chirps his merry song,
I try their plan when aught goes wrong,
And, happy as a king—
Oh, ho!—
I whistle and I sing.

"I'd like to know why I should weep,"
Sang sunny-hearted Joe.
"The gloomiest day will end at last;
The [illegible] weather soon is past;
Whate'er the troubles o'er me cast,
Still, happy as a king—
Oh, ho!—
I'll whistle and I'll sing."

I know of some I'd like to see
Take pattern after Joe.
Sighs, tears and frowns don't help to bear
The daily burden of our care,
Wise Joe, the lot of life to share,
And, happy as a king,
To whistle and to sing.

SOCIABLE BIRDS.

Odd Associations—The Fish-Hawk and the Blackbirds—The Owl and the Weavers.

There are all sorts of birds, just as there are all sorts of people. Not only big birds and little birds, but bad birds and good birds; birds that love to fight, like the saucy little English sparrows, and birds that love each other, and cuddle together all the time, like the Java sparrows; fierce birds and gentle birds; birds that build beautiful houses, like the Baltimore orioles, and birds that build no houses, but lay their eggs in other birds' houses, like the cow-birds.

Then, again, there are lonely birds, like the hawks and owls, and sociable birds, like blackbirds and weaver-birds. And speaking of lonely birds and sociable birds makes me think of a curious case of a lonely bird and a lot of sociable birds which all lived together in a most comfortable and happy way.

If ever you have seen a fish-hawk you know he is as wild-eyed and savage-beaked a fellow as you would want to meet. I ought to say she is, for, as a fact, Mrs. Fish-hawk is both larger and fiercer than her husband. She builds her nest in the topmost branches of a lonely, lofty tree as near to the sounding breakers as possible, and there brings up as hungry and noisy a family as can be found. The nest is a mighty structure, to begin with, but, as it is added to each year, it in time grows to be simply enormous. Then it is that the sociable, impudent blackbird comes along, and actually builds in the very nest of the hawk. Not merely one blackbird, mind you, but just as many as can crowd into the huge mass of sticks which makes the big bird's nest. And there they all live together, with their babies almost touching each other, and yet never quarreling. They never have anything to say to each other, it is true, but that may be because the hawk and blackbird languages are so different.

Even more odd than this is the case of the owl and the weaver-birds. The weaver-birds are probably the most sociable of all the birds. They do not merely build their nests near each other, but put them side by side in great numbers, and then make a thatched roof to cover them all. It is hard to believe that such a beautiful little bird village can be the work of birds which have no other tools than their bills, but it is, and these little architects do not make any fuss about it either. The weaver-birds which build this sort of nest are called sociable weaver-birds, to distinguish them from other weavers, birds which build their nests separate from each other.

If there is one bird more than another that most little birds positively hate, it is the owl. The owl sleeps all day, and goes abroad at dusk when most other birds are making ready to sleep. Then the owl's eyes are good, and he can see little birds which can not see him, and down he pounces on them and swallows them. The poor birds can not even hear him coming, for his wings are so covered with soft down that he moves through the air without any noise, and is clutching a poor little bird in his cruel claws before it is awake enough to know it is in trouble. This is all very well for the owl at night, but in the day-time it is quite another matter. Then his owlship can not see well out of his great blinking eyes, and is wise enough to try to keep well hidden lest the birds he eats by night should catch him and have their revenge. For in some way the little fellows know the owl can not see any better by daylight than they can by night, and therefore when they catch him in the sunlight they make him suffer for his misdeeds done by moonlight. They cry out and call all the small birds of the neighborhood. Then they scold and scold and fly at him and peck at him, and all he can do is ruffle up his feathers and look wicked, or perhaps console himself with thoughts of how he will worry his tormentors when the horrid sunlight has faded away.

The fact that the owl is so hated makes it so much more creditable to any birds that will refrain from persecuting it when they have the opportunity. A traveler tells of having seen a colony of weaver-birds which not only did not persecute an owl when the occasion offered, but went so far as to give it a home. That surely was a returning of good for evil. It seems that after the little weavers had completed their house they were one morning surprised to find a visitor asleep on their roof. It was as if you were to come upon a tramp lying on your door-step. No doubt the first thought of the weavers was to give the intruder a very warm reception. There was a noisy consultation and a great deal of flying back and forth, but nothing was done to annoy the owl; and finally the little birds flew off to attend to the business of getting breakfast. Occasionally a little weaver would perch near the gloomy-looking visitor and chatter for a few moments, but that was the worst that happened, and the owl was seemingly so well pleased with the spot that day after day he returned to it. The result was that at last the little birds came and went without paying any more attention to the owl than if he had been a block of wood.—John R. Coryell, in Harper's Young People.

A REMARKABLE PARROTT.

A True Account of a Wonderfully Intelligent Bird.

The following account, says the New York Observer, of an intelligent speaking bird, which seemed almost to have been endowed with reason, was sent to us by a lady, one of our subscribers. Since receiving it we have made further inquiry, and have the following assurance from the writer. "The account is strictly true. I have heard a great many wonderful things about 'Miss Polly,' but these came under my personal observation."

Last fall my colored cook asked me if she might have her parrot sent to her, and I rather unwillingly consented. One morning the village express wagon came to the door bringing "Miss Polly," who, to the great amusement of the driver, was talking very distinctly and sensibly. After dinner I went to the kitchen to see the new arrival and as soon as she saw me she said: "Hello, girl!" Now why that parrot did not say "good-bye" or any other words was a mystery to me, but on a longer acquaintance I found she used words she considered suitable for the occasion. The next morning while taking breakfast I left the door open, as Polly was alone in the kitchen, and soon I heard a voice like a child's, singing these words, and in the right time:

"In the cross, in the cross,
Be my glory ever,
Till my raptured soul shall find
Rest beyond the river."

After a pause she said, "Sing, Polly," and then changed the tune and sang: "Oh think of the home over there," and then, I suppose thinking of breakfast, she said: "Polly want bread and butter," "Polly want tea," "Polly want potato."

After a little while I became very fond of Miss Polly, and she of me. When I went to the kitchen I would peep into the door, without saying a word, and after a severe look, Polly would call: "What are you doing?" and when I entered she would jump for joy and say: "How do you do, love?" "Polly pretty well." Sometimes if I was giving directions to my cook, Polly would chatter so fast that you could hear no one else, and if I took a book in my hand she would make believe read in a continuous strain.

One of her great delights was to have me open the cage and let her come out and crawl upon the top, when she would say, "Aha, Miss Polly!" and laugh loud and long. One day, when she was enjoying her freedom on the top of the cage, I put my head down on my hands and made believe cry aloud. Polly gave me just a look, then came quickly down and jumped in my lap and looked in my face. I thought perhaps this exhibition of feeling was accidental, but I tried the experiment another day when Polly was behind the cage, and she climbed directly over and came in my lap as before.

One day some very little kittens came to the house. I took one and stroked it, and Polly looked on for a moment, then came to the wires of her cage, put down her head and said, "Want to scratch Polly," in this way showing her jealousy of the kitten.

It was quite an amusement to the school-children to hear her say her letters. They would call to her if she was in the yard, and she would answer them. One thing I found rather troublesome. If a child or a man ran quickly past the house she would call "Fire! Fire!" so loud that you could hear her a long distance off. She must have heard people cry fire in the streets of Brooklyn, where she formerly lived. Always when I left her she would say: "Good-bye, love," or "Good-bye, dear."

One day I said to her: "Polly, how nice it would be if you could live again in another world." I was startled to hear her answer: "That's so."

These are a few of the singularly appropriate remarks Miss Polly made, and I am sure you will agree with me that she is a very wise bird.

Is Dinner Ready?

Hero was a shepherd dog, owned on a large farm in Scotland. Some of the fields where the men worked were at a distance from the house.

Hero liked to go with the men and stay near them while they were at work. They would know by the shadows on the mountains when it was nearly noon. Sometime, when they were very hungry they told Hero to go and see whether dinner was ready. Hero knew well what this meant. He would go to the house and look in at the kitchen door. Then he would return with his answer.

How did he know, and how could he tell the men? The family used what is called a trivet-table. This is not often seen here, but is common in Scotland. It is a table which, when not in use, can be folded up against the wall to make room, and let down when wanted.

If the table were let down, and a kettle of broth stood on the hearth, Hero ran joyfully back to the field, and frisked about, wagging his tail, and lapping with his tongue. But if these signs of dinner were wanting, he walked slowly back, with drooping ears and tail, and crept behind his master. This a true story.—Our Little Ones.

RUCHINGS.

A Style of Feminine Adornment Which Does Not Lose Its Popularity.

It was predicted that ruchings for neck and sleeve finishings would go out of style, but they are too becoming to decrease in popularity, especially with ladies whose neck and hands need the softening influences of the ruching, those with edge lines of gold or tinsel are worn, also the pretty ruchings of crepe lisse.

With dressy toilettes, plaited ruches of pale pink, lilac, cream or blue silk crape are worn; they are usually fastened at one side with a bow of ribbon, a jeweled ornament or a spray of natural flowers, and sometimes a handsome finish of rich lace falls below the plaiting.

The most distingue neck-finishings consist of double folds of crepe lisse, etamine, silk gauze and gold and silver tulle, canvas or muslin. These folds are made in white and cream, gold and silver, or gold with red, pink, blue or maroon silk gauze, arranged with it in alternating folds. Even velvet bands of black or dark colors are used, so that no white or any tint can show around the neck.

The band collar generally finishes the neck of high bodices, even when other decorative adjuncts are employed and it is surprising to see how many fancies can be shown at the throat of a stylish dress. From a number of models may be selected a corsage finished with a shirred standing collar outside of a lace ruching. The next collar is of velvet, richly beaded and edged with bead pendants, and near this is a collar with a point in back and front on lower portion. A decorative collar is a straight band of velvet, edged on both sides with a row of beads and tied at the side with a ribbon, while other collars are fastened slightly away from the front opening of corsage, with a buckle of gold, silver, steel or of jet.—Philadelphia Times.

New Church Building.

Thursday, the Ladies Guild of the Charlevoix Episcopal church, purchased the two desirable lots immediately west of the S. M. See residence on Antrim street, of H. B. Chapman of Bay Springs, for $850.

It is the intention of the society to begin work this fall upon a handsome cottage chapel to be used for church purposes until a larger edifice can be built, when it will be used as a parsonage.

The large number of Episcopalians who visit Charlevoix every summer have expressed a desire to join with the members living in Charlevoix, in furthering the work. We congratulate the society upon securing so desirable a site.

A Handsome Building.

W. P. Brown & Co., have nearly completed their attractive bank building on Bridge street. The building is of red brick, handsomely ornamented with iron cornice and window caps. It will be finished throughout in birch.

The front of the lower story will be used for the main office, and the private office of the firm. The rear portion contains three large rooms connected by folding doors, two of which will be used as parlors and the third as a dining room. In rear of the latter is a sleeping room and to the north, the kitchen.

The second story, to be occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Gus Brown and by Mr. P. Brown, contains a number of handsome rooms. A suite of offices is also located on this floor.

The general arrangement of the interior and the appearance from the street, reflect credit upon the owners and builders.

A Model Residence.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Sherwood are "at home" in the handsome dwelling that adorns the upper terrace on State street.

Even the most unobserving passer-by, can not help but notice the superior taste that has been displayed in the construction and painting of the house, and the trimly kept grounds.

Entering the tower hallway you pass into the larger of a suite of parlors, finished, like the remainder of the residence, in [illegible] woods, principally ash, walnut and pine. The family bed-room and the dining-room adjoin to the west. Passing up the hall stairway, through the four up-stairs chambers you reach the tower balcony from which a surpassingly lovely view of the lakes and town is obtained.

The house will be heated by furnace. The many details of the construction have been personally superintended by Mr. Sherwood. The good taste that characterizes the whole structure and its surroundings is a matter for congratulation. Mr. and Mrs. Sherwood's circle of friends will wish them a long life of happiness in their charming home.

Mackinac Island.

For the SENTINEL.

We started Tuesday morning on the steamer T. S. Faxton for Mackinac arriving there shortly after noon when we, in company with about a dozen others, hired a carryall and started to do the sights of the Island.

The first place of interest is the resort built on lands of Gurdon Hubbard of Chicago and a beautiful place it is for gentlemen who prefer keeping horses and driving them to boating. The roads on the Island are very fine for this purpose but its no comparison to Charlevoix for boating or safety as a play-ground for children. The next place of interest is the Lover's Leap and the Devil's Kitchen. Our party visited the Kitchen but his satanic majesty was not in, and its so long since he has been heard from that he probably in trying to reach his domicile from above, some dark night, fell and broke his neck, and this accounts for the [illegible] not now being mentioned by the modern preacher.

The next place of interest is the Sugarloaf rock, where our party with a number of others were photographed by some traveling artist from Ohio; next is the Arch Rock, one of the grandest sights nature has produced to interest the visitor and benefit the Islanders as an advertisement of something worth seeing. Our next place was the fort, one of the best places in the U. S. to send a company that has seen hard service to recruit up. The place is very sightly and is kept nice and clean and the soldiers in their holiday attire.

Mackinac has not improved much in the last ten years and many of the oldest land marks yet remain, and some inhabitants of Jno. Jacob Astors fur trading times, one of the most prominent being the postmaster.

We had a cold, rough passage home but from the known watchfulness of the man that stands under the lion we had no fears but what we should be safely landed at the promised time and were not disappointed, and we feel under obligations to the owners and officers of the boat for such a pleasant trip for the small sum charged.

If the Northern Michigan line of steamers name their new $75,000 passenger boat "The City of Charlevoix" our citizens will not be slow to show their appreciation of the compliment.

Complaints have been made against the tug Maud S. for violating the laws of navigation, the charge being that she was running on the lake after dark without having her lights in position as required by law. The penalty is a severe fine.—Cheboygan Tribune.

Capt. Lockwood, the U. S. Engineer in charge of the harbors on this coast of Lake Michigan, complains that a number of tugs and steamers do not check in running through the channels. If the thing is continued there is liable to be a surprise party some day.

Mr. Frederick Seymour, manager of the Northern Michigan Line, tells us that he is negotiating with the Detroit Drydock Company and another large ship-building concern with a view of having a new passenger steamer built for his line during the coming winter. The business of the line has been steadily increasing and has already outgrown the carrying facilities of the Lawrence and Champlain. Mr. Seymour now proposes to build a full-length passenger cabin propeller with 175 feet keel and fore and aft compound engine, costing at least $75,000.—Inland Marine.

A diver is at work exploring the wreck of the Independence, the first propeller that was engaged in Lake Superior trade, and which sunk near Sault Ste. Marie in 40 or 50 feet of water over 32 years ago, by the explosion of her boiler. Nothing remains but the hull in which is yet stored fully one-half of the original cargo. The pony engine has been recovered uninjured, and a quantity of nails, some gun shot, two barrels of butter and some quantity of pork. The principal part of the cargo, a large quantity of whiskey, the special object of the work, is yet to be found.

A novel craft is being constructed at Cleveland. The machinery was put in place Thursday. She is rectangular in shape, 82 feet over all, 36 feet beam, and 10 feet hold. She is flat bottom and top, and is divided into three compartments athwartship, the central portion to be occupied by her boiler and engine, and those at either end for grain storage, capable of holding together 15,000 bushels. The whole cost is said to be $26,000, and when completed she is to be towed to Buffalo, where she is to be used in transferring grain from lake to canal craft, and thus avoid the exorbitant elevator charges at that port. She will be ready for work next month.

Indifferent Lengths.

The maple manufacturer from across the lake came in and planted himself in a chair, mad through and through. "If you want to know my opinion of your Chicago inspection," he began, "you can have it, and it shan't cost you a nickel. It's cost me just $1,625 so far this summer, but I'm not stingy; I'll give it away. Chicago inspection on hard maple flooring strips is a black fraud, and a good deal blacker steal. It's rotten to the core, and needs to be ventilated. Some time ago I sold 800,000 feet of maple flooring in the rough to a Chicago hardwood dealer, one of the best judges of lumber you've got, too, at $13 per thousand straight. He sent a Chicago inspector over who tallied the whole lot at the mill; the inspection was all right, everything satisfactory, and the money paid to us cheerfully. We tried it again with another Chicago firm, and sold a lot at $6, $14, and $22, subject to inspection. Now, sir, we actually took more pains with this lot than with the first, culling and throwing out poor pieces at the mill much more closely, and the result is that of 650,000 feet so far delivered your blasted Chicago inspection makes it average us just ten dollars and fifty cents a thousand! If that ain't stealing $2.50 a thousand out of me I'd like to know what you would call it? Another thing; out of 2,500,000 feet of good hard maple logs, scaled by Doyle's rule, which you know ought to be overrun, I am 470,000 feet short to-day by trying to make lumber to satisfy these inspection butchers. One cargo of 151,000 feet that I sent over here turned out 135,000, the 15,000 being counted out on me as cuttings. I sent 240,000 feet of the same identical stock to Cheboygan, and the cuttings only amounted to 8,000 feet. If we had an association of hardwood manufacturers I would go in for a fine of $1,000 to be assessed on any member who would ship a foot of lumber to this market to be sold on inspection. You hear me!"—Chicago Lumberman.

Senator Sherman in his campaign speech the other day said that the prohibition question should not enter into party politics and that in Ohio, so far as the liquor question is concerned, "the issue is fairly between free whiskey and regulation of the traffic." The Saturday Evening Post of Grand Rapids says that "the votes in October will show him his mistake," which means, of course, that the Prohibitionists will do all they can, short of voting the Democratic straight, to help the free whisky side.

The Hon. John Sherman has a comprehensive view of the situation. He says: "The first fruits of Democratic success are contempt for the law, hard times, a want of confidence in the future, and a widening of the conflict between capital and labor."

Thank You.

The children of the Chicago resort presented to the Ladies Society of the Congregational church, $16.25 toward paying for a carpet for the church.

This money was made by much hard work on the part of the children who made and sold candy, the proceeds of which were disposed of as above. The Society feels grateful for this much needed assistance. Surely such benevolence is worthy older persons than these, and if they have begun in their early days to cast their bread upon the waters, we may expect for them abundant harvests in time to come.

—The man who affects to despise his local paper and who is too small souled to subscribe and pay for it, is generally the fellow who wants to borrow it of his neighbors, especially if it has anything concerning him—such an item, is of course, certain, in the estimation of the egotist, to be the largest and most important one in the despised paper. "Nothing was created in vain;" the small souled man only needs grafting or educating to grow better fruit or possess a better or more liberal mind.—Ovid Union.

Local News.

—Miss Tona Taylor of Kalamazoo was in town Monday.

—Notice the new ad of F. G. Hines & Co. They have a fine line of school supplies.

—Cadillac is to have a democratic newspaper. Judge Fallass is at the head of the scheme.

—L. D. Bartholomew has a fine turnout in the shape of a fine pony and English road-cart.

—For an optical symphony, just wait until Round lake is illuminated nightly by electric lights. It will outshine Alladin's garden.

—S. Wilson, the photographer who has had charge of the Bradbeer gallery during the proprietor's absence, returned to Grand Rapids, Monday.

—The members of I. O. G. T. lodge No. 927 are requested to be present at next meeting, Sept. 11th, 1885. Important business.—W. A. ATCHISON, W. S.

—The act for the regulation of pharmacy, passed at the last legislative session, will go into effect Sept. 18, and after that druggists will have 90 days in which to register.

—The sidewalks of Charlevoix are in so good condition generally that where they are defective the carelessness is especially noticeable. In two or three places the walks on Main street are in bad shape.

—At the two mile roller race last Thursday evening, Sherman Wilson won the prize of $15 against Dee Allen, by two laps.

—Dave Bradbeer returned to Charlevoix in much improved health Wednesday. He is able to walk without the aid of crutches.

—It is said that the G. R. & I. R. R. will put a ferry boat on Little Traverse bay next season, to run in connection with the trains.

—Capt. Bennett and Mr. Porter of Moline, Ills., and Mr. Bennett of Chicago are making their friends glad by their presence. They came Monday.

—The Jewish holidays begin this evening and extend to Saturday evening at seven o'clock. The store of Rosenthal & Son will be closed during that period.

—Mr. Robert Pollock has been appointed keeper of one of the cottages in the Ohio Reform school. His wife, nee Mamie Nicholls, will spend three hours a day in teaching.

—Rev. B. H. Whitman has recovered his health sufficiently to go into active service, and the next conference will supply him a charge that will mean their gain and Charlevoix's loss.

—After three weeks of cold weather the frigidity of which was only surpassed by that of southern Michigan at the same time, Charlevoix people were rejoiced at the advent of warmer weather, Sunday.

—If putting on a new G. R. & I. R. R. steamer for the Traverse Bay trade means the withdrawal of the Hannah, Ley & Co. boats that have accommodated us so long and well, we vote against it.

—Dr. E. B. Fairfield, the Manistee divine who dedicated the Charlevoix Congregational church last winter, gave two discourses from the same pulpit Sunday which were replete with thoughtful analogies and elicited much favorable comment.

—The Harbor Point and Wequetonsing hotels both close the 15th.

—The last Petoskey Record contains a manly editorial, headed, "The Cat Snarls."

—We hope to see Judge Mills of Kalamazoo a permanent summer resident at Charlevoix.

—We are under obligations to Mr. Jacob Steed for a copy of the SENTINEL of August 13th, 1881, to complete our files.

—The many friends of Mr. John Mitchell, the U. S. Ass't. Engineer, were glad to welcome him back to Charlevoix, last Thursday.

—Capt. Charles E. Linzee, Assistant Quartermaster of the Michigan Military Academy, was the guest of his friend, Darley Merch, last week.

—Petoskey people may look for more local matter and a superior quality of editorial stuff in the Record, now that Mr. Marion Tripp has taken an interest in that sheet.

—A. B. Leet, formerly general freight and passenger agent of the G. R. & I. railroad has gone to El Paso, Texas, to accept the position of general manager of the Mexico & Arizona railroad pool.

—It is always a pleasure to meet newspaper men, but we never extend the hand of welcome to an editorial brother with more sincerity, than when State editor Townsend of the Daily Telegraph favors us with a visit.

—Detroit Gazette of 1817: "About the 20th ult. a drove of 200 cattle, belonging to the Contractor, arrived at Green Bay (at the mouth of Fox river, on lake Michigan), from Ohio, a distance of 5 or 600 miles of wilderness."

—Another reason why tugs and steamers should not run at full speed through the channels: Seven young people were capsized by the swells of a tug, while attempting to cross the channel at Oshkosh, last Wednesday, and drowned.

—The quartette of young men awaiting trial at the November term, on the charge of murdering the Indian, Geo. Optegesic, are still confined in the village jail. Sheriff Berdan has the care of them; providing their meals and sleeping there. The efforts of Moore and Graham to secure $100 bail each, have been unsuccessful.

—A Greenville gentleman sitting for his photograph assumed such an expression of infinite weariness that the man at the camera paused and urged his subject to look more cheerful if he desired a satisfactory picture. "If my present position and expression cost anything extra," was the reply, "I am willing to pay for it. My wife is at Petoskey, and the picture goes to her. I know what I am about; draw the cover and begin counting."—Grand Rapids Eagle.

—Daily Resorter: "One of the most 'go-ahead' business men of Northern Michigan is George Miller, the Charlevoix clothier. He not only keeps his large and well selected stock of goods in first class shape, but also appreciates the advantage of outside attractions. One of his show windows is enclosed with wire netting so as to form a mammoth cage, and fitted with small trees, logs, mosses, etc., until it looks like a bit of nature. A number of squirrels go skipping about, and a number of "lay figures," including two stuffed cubs, make the scene more natural."

—A new postal card has been issued. The new cards are printed on harder material than some of those formerly in use and are easy to write on. They are handsome in appearance, the printing matter being of a light brown color. The warning on the face, which has had various phraseology, as "Put nothing on this side but the address," and "Nothing but the address on this side," becomes in the new card: "Nothing but the address to be on this side." The words "United States" appear on a scroll, and under them the words "Postal card," and a row of 13 stars is between the two lines. A youthful head of Jefferson appears on the stamp, partly surrounded by a wreath. There is more ornamentation than on those formerly in use.

—That peerless Detroit evening daily, the Evening Journal, was two years old last Wednesday and in honor of the event an eight page edition was issued and a fac-simile edition of the Detroit Gazette of 1817. We clip a leading editorial as follows: "An unusual degree of interest appears to have existed among the people of the eastern, middle and southern states respecting the soil, productions, climate and other advantages of this Territory. As it is our intentions to devote a portion of our columns to the dissemination of such intelligence, we would gladly receive from gentlemen who have the means communications which may in the least gratify this laudable curiosity. We are at present destitute of both materials and leisure to satisfy distant readers in this particular; and must therefore call upon our friends to supply us with such information, that the emigrant may fix his abode where his labor will be the best rewarded, and that emigration may continue to strengthen the Republican system by invigorating the weaker members."

—Traverse City will probably have electric lights.

—The state pharmaceutical association meets in Detroit, October 13, 14 and 15.

—Notice the new ad of Bartholomew & Co. The wood engraving is by Mr F. S. Blanchard.

—The Priest on this beat, is authority for the statement that the Catholics will build a church in Charlevoix next year.

—Mr. Frank Doty, postmaster of Reading and Mr. C. H. Chapman, a Hillsdale merchant, are visiting friends here and at Bay Springs.

—Miss Flora Nelson, who has been visiting relatives at Elk Rapids during the past two months, returned home Friday, on the Champlain.

—Dan Rhodes and wife have moved to Petoskey. Daniel will act as cook on the steamer Van Raalte while his wife has been engaged as chambermaid.

—About sixty dollars was realized at the M. E. donation, Wednesday evening. This amount was sufficient to complete the pastor's back salary. The social part of the evening's entertainment was remarkably pleasant.

—L. F. Dacolf of Boyne Falls has recently received from Ohio a large number of Cotswold sheep which he offers for sale at low prices. Farmers will find it to their advantage to raise sheep here as they do well and are profitable.

—If our Chicago resort friends follow the example of the south side resort and sever the unsightly row of piles extending into Pine lake, to the height of the government work they will improve their charming view in that direction, amazingly.

—By an act of the Michigan legislature, central standard time becomes legal time for the transaction of state business on Sept. 18, 12 m., which is 90 days from the close of the last session, June 20. When this law takes effect, courts of law and all official bodies will be governed by legal standard time.

—Major C. G. Townsend, the handsome Kalamazoo journalist, has gone north, taking with him a stock of hay fever which he hopes to dispose of in the upper country. Major Townsend's hay fever is of the very best kind, having been contracted from a number of the oldest families, but, like a Spartan that he is, the gallant old soldier will cheerfully sacrifice it to the country's good.—Detroit Journal.

—Mrs. Daniel Brown, of Harbor Springs, died in the dentist Perry's office, Petoskey, Wednesday. Mrs. Brown suffered from her teeth and she called at Perry's office to have 11 of them removed. Dr. Perry administered 15 grains of chloroform. The teeth were extracted, and the lady was apparently reviving from the effects of the drug, when she gasped and groaned and died. Heart disease is alleged, but Mr. Brown will not allow a post mortem. The victim was but 27 years old and had heretofore been in excellent health.

—There is a prospect that the Mullet Lake House will be moved to Cheboygan. Smith Bros., the proprietors, are looking for a site in the village on which to place it. They have two or three different sites in view and the probabilities are, it they can secure either of them at a reasonable figure, that the hotel will be moved down and re-erected, during the coming winter. It is one of the finest hotels in Michigan and one of the best furnished and would be a credit to any town. It is to be hoped that their negotiations for a site may prove successful.—Cheboygan Tribune.

—Elk Rapids is greatly interested over the fact that the Elk Rapids iron company has just received an order for 400 tons of charcoal iron to be shipped to England, when samples of the metal have been seen. This will be the first shipment of western made iron out of the country and the proprietors hope to build up an extensive continental trade after they shall have succeeded in securing an introduction. The furnaces are running full handed, and show an air of prosperity not in keeping with the reports from iron districts generally. Dexter & Noble are pushers.

—It is likely a stock company will be organized between now and next season, with a capital of $200,000 or thereabouts, for the erection of a magnificent summer hotel on Mackinac Island, and to improve the grounds around it. The project was talked of last season, and all the steamboat lines making connections with the island from Detroit to Chicago, and the G. R. & I. railroad, agreed to help the enterprise by subscribing liberally for the stock, but the scheme was "knocked in the head" by the Michigan Central refusing to come into the pool. This season hundreds were turned away from the island from lack of accommodations at the hotels, and it is understood the Michigan Central is now willing to join with the other corporations in building the hotel. The project will be actively agitated as soon as the summer business for this year is over.—Grand Rapids Leader.

Charlevoix Summer Resort Items.

The Chicago Club house is closed.

The Belvedere still has sixty boarders.

Dee Allen has returned to Kalamazoo.

The Gulley cottage was closed last Wednesday.

The old Hart boat house on Pine lake has been torn down.

State editor Townsend of the Kalamazoo Telegraph, came Thursday.

A force of three Toledo dressmakers are at work at the Moore cottage.

Mrs. O. M. Allen, neice, and Mrs Bradley, returned to their homes, Friday.

J. L. Sebring and family closed their cottage Thursday and returned to Kalamazoo.

The Pine Lake terrace adjoining the cottages of Gen. King and Mrs. Dealing, has been graded and sodded.

The beauty of the McKay grove on the point has been enhanced by trimming and thinning out some of the trees.

One hundred resorters still linger on the resort, rejoicing that they are enjoying the finest weather of the season.

The ungainly looking row of piles that has so long marred the Pine Lake view on the resort has been reduced to a common height.

E. B. Fairfield, D. D., LL. D., of Manistee, with his wife and son Ernest, are guests of Mr. and Mrs. H. P. Parmelee at Breezy Point cottage.

One of the problems for the resort directors to figure out this winter, will be a plan to provide boat accommodations for the cottages on the new addition.

The friends of Michigan's well known mathematician will be pleased to learn that his health is being rapidly restored. He will remain at his cottage for two weeks yet.

Workmen have been engaged since Saturday in scraping the sand bank on the south side of the lower channel into the space in rear of the late government work. A needed improvement.

A. P. Hodge, the genial secretary of the Chicago Paper Co. is stopping at the Belvedere with two Chicago friends who have been "doing" the fishing localities of this region, with him, for the past month.

The Chicago Summer Resort Association have purchased between four and five acres of land adjoining their grounds on the west and extending along the terrace from the Gates cottage to the Smithson cottage site. The price paid was $2790.

Fred J. E. Woolbridge and Glenn S. Allen, left on the New York express last night for Amherst, Mass., to enter the college there as students. O. M. Allen, Esq., accompanied them. These are bright young men and they will do honor to old Kalamazoo and the schools of that city.—Daily Telegraph.

Charlie Hampton's Daily Resorter ceased publication and went into winter quarters Thursday. The Resorter has harvested a number of the $150 "large, elegant, silver dollars," the publisher dropped two years ago, along with the kindest expressions for the pleasure it has brought and the good it has done. It will be born again next season and every resorter should make up his mind to subscribe for it.

A sad accident happened to President Abbott of the Agricultural College, last Wednesday morning. He was seated in a sail boat at Wilcox's landing when the sail jibed and the boom forced him over the side of the boat, his head striking the dock. He had been suffering from nervous prostration for some time and this severe shock was sufficient to render him unconscious for 48 hours. He is at Allouez cottage under the care of Dr. Preston. His family are with him. The many friends of President Abbott will hope for his speedy convalescence.

Marriage.

Mr. Charles Shepard of the hardware firm of Shepard Brothers, Boyne City, and Miss Minnie Edwards, youngest daughter of Capt. Edwards of Charlevoix, were married Thursday afternoon at one o'clock by Rev. J. T. Iddings, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Oscar Upright.

The wedding was private, only members of the two families being present.

Mr. and Mrs. Shepard left at once for Boyne City, their future home.

A large number of handsome presents bespoke the esteem in which the bride is held by her friends. The SENTINEL extends its heartiest congratulations and good wishes.

Good For Joe!

Mr. Jos. Beauvais, the accommodating and efficient boat builder who has boat liveries in Charlevoix and on the Chicago club grounds has purchased the Page lot immediately west of Promontory Point on the Charlevoix summer resort grounds and will build an attractive boat house over the spring (which will be transformed into a drinking fountain early next season) to be used as a boat livery. It is also Mr. Beauvais' intention to add to it as soon as the demand arises and provide quarters for the Charlevoix Boat club.

SENATOR SHERMAN

Sounds the Republican Keynote of the Campaign at Mt. Gilead, Ohio.

A Rousing Speech Bristling with Sound Arguments in Favor of Republicanism.

Mt. Gilead, O., August 28.—Hon. John Sherman spoke here to-day on the political issues of the day as follows:

Fellow Citizens: It is a long time since I had the pleasure of addressing the Republicans of Morrow County, but I have not forgotten, nor will I ever forget the great obligations I am under to them for the friendship and partiality when, more than thirty years ago, I first appeared before them as a candidate for Congress. These were important and stirring times. The Republican party was then formed as an active and effective organization to resist the extension of slavery. Many of the actors in these scenes have passed away, and now a generation, the sons and even the grandsons of the old Republicans of Morrow County are charged with the duty of completing and advancing the work of the Republican party.

TALMAGE IN LONDON.

A Masterly Discourse on "Unappreciated Services."

The Old and Wounded Soldiers of David's Army—Christian Rewards Not Alone for Those Who Serve in Conspicuous Places.

Rev. T. DeWitt Talmage preached recently in John Wesley's great church, the "City Roads Chapel," in London. His subject was "Unappreciated Services." His text was from I. Samuel 30:24: "As his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that tarrieth by the stuff." The discourse was as follows:

If you have never seen an army change quarters, you have no idea of the amount of baggage—twenty loads, fifty loads, a hundred loads of baggage. David and his army were about to start on a double-quick march for the recovery of their captured families from the Amalekites. So they left by the brook Besor their blankets, their knapsacks, their baggage and their carriages. Who shall be detailed to watch this stuff? There are sick soldiers, and wounded soldiers, and aged soldiers, who are not able to go on swift military expedition, but who are able to do some work, and so they are detailed to watch the baggage. There is many a soldier who is not strong enough to march thirty miles in a day and then plunge into a ten-hours' fight, who is able with drawn sword lifted against his shoulder to pace up and down as a sentinel to keep off an enemy who might put the torch to the baggage. There are two hundred of these crippled and aged and wounded soldiers detailed to watch the baggage. Some of them, I suppose, had bandages across the brow, and some of them had their arms in a sling, and some of them walked on crutches. They were not cowards shirking duty. They had fought in many a fierce battle for their country and their God.

HOME AND FARM.

—A pound of sugar is one pint, an ounce of any liquid is two tablespoonfuls, a pint of liquid weighs sixteen ounces.

—Small hogs usually fatten quickly after maturity, while the large breeds make the best growth before the time of reaching the adult age.

—Lard will remove wagon grease. Rub the spot with the lard as if washing it and when it is well out wash in the ordinary way with soap and water until thoroughly cleansed.—Cleveland Leader.

—Prof. J. P. Stelle, of the Mobile Register, speaking of the killing of cabbage-worms, by the application of ice-cold water, says that, when first recommended, some years ago, "it worked no good whatever."

—Wash for removing dandruff. Take of borax one drachm, rose water one half pint, tincture of cantharides one-half drachm, cologne water one-half pint. Mix and apply night and morning.—Philadelphia Call.

—Colts foaled during the fall will not occasion loss of labor on the farm by the mares, as they can be carefully managed during the winter and turned into the pasture in spring, leaving their dams free for early plowing.—Chicago Tribune.

—The time to shape the heads of trees is while they are young. Then the top can easily be trained in almost any shape, and with very little attention, but, after the tree has attained some size and age, it is very difficult to change its form and pruning them may only injure.—Chicago Journal.

—Have the children's teeth examined by a good dentist twice a year, and repaired if they need it. Possibly a tooth that is meant to last a lifetime is rapidly becoming worthless just for the need of a little attention now. But don't give the children sloppy food; they should use their teeth, or they will decay.—Boston Budget.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

HARRISON, General Grant's body servant, has been engaged by Mark Twain as canvasser for a bust of the dead General.

IN the New York Coffee Exchange there are specimens of more than six hundred varieties of coffee, and there are remote districts still to be heard from.

TEN THOUSAND English agricultural laborers will be settled in the Northwest Territories of Canada, if a suitable point of land can be obtained from the Dominion Government.

A SENSIBLE Judge was that in Oakland, Cal., who declined to give naturalization papers to a Canadian because the applicant knew so little as to believe that a King ruled the United States.

MANY of the half-breeds in the Turtle Mountains of Dakota have lately made from twenty-five dollars to forty dollars a week hauling buffalo bones to Minnewaukon. Competition among buyers ran the price up to over twenty dollars a ton.

"FATHER" LEVI ALLEN, known to Second Adventists for these forty and odd years by his attendance at their camp meetings, and to Methodists before that time as well, died at Chicopee Falls, Mass., a few days ago, in his eighty-ninth year.

MRS. GRANT has grown much attached to the cottage at Mount MacGregor, where the General died, and it is reported that she will remain there until October, as she feels better able to bear her loss in that retired place. She has left the cottage but once since her husband's death.

VERY severe volcanic disturbances in 1886 are predicted by a French scientist, to occur at a time when the attractive influence of the solar system is most strongly felt upon our planets, or, rather, when that influence is most unevenly distributed during a near approach of the great attractive bodies.

THE Mexican editors who recently did this country have been welcomed home again as though they were heroes returning from war. They point with pride to the fact that they traveled fourteen thousand miles in the land of the Yankees without an accident of any kind. The trip cost them about seventy-five dollars apiece.

THE National Temperance Society recommends that the week beginning September 20 be observed as the Centennial Temperance week, and urges all temperance elements to combine in their respective communities in holding public meetings at which the work of the century can be reviewed and plans formulated for greater efficiency in the future.

THE Maumee Valley Monument Association was organized the other day at Turkey-Foot Rock, twelve miles from Toledo, O., the site of the battle of Fallen Timbers, in which General Wayne won his decisive victory over the Indians of the Northwest. Congress will be asked for an appropriation to mark the historic ground with suitable monuments.

THE first volume of General Grant's book is in type. The manuscript of the second volume is all written and completed as originally intended, and will in due course be published as prepared by General Grant himself. It comes down to the close of the civil war. The first volume will be published about the first of November and the second volume next March.

AT Oakville, Can., the champion mean man has been discovered in a resident for whose dying wife the doctor prescribed wine. Wine could not easily be had, and the doctor furnished some from his private stores. When he sent in his bill the sorrowing widower laid an information against him for selling liquor in a prohibition county contrary to the Scott law.

THE Pullman Car Company, at Chicago, began work on an order for one hundred flat cars one day recently. Twenty-nine gangs of four men each went to work at seven a. m. The first car was completed in two hours and a quarter, and before eleven o'clock twelve cars moved out of the shops. The entire one hundred were finished at five p. m., and an hour later twenty-four of them were lettered and ready to ship.

THERE were nearly 3,100 new cases of cholera in Spain on the 2d and over 1,000 deaths. Toulon and Marseilles, as well as other points in France, were still suffering from the terrible disease.

FATAL DISASTER.

A Ferry-Boat on a Wisconsin River Capsizes, Drowning Six Persons—Four Men Killed and Two Wounded by a Cave-In in a Pennsylvania Mine.

OSHKOSH, WIS., Sept. 3.—Six employes at the Diamond Match factory and Bridge-tender Berry were drowned yesterday morning at six o'clock while crossing the river in a small boat. It has been the custom for the bridge-tenders to row people across the river when the draw was open in order to save them from going around some distance to cross the regular city bridge. Night Bridge-tender Berry started across with eleven persons in the boat. A tug had just passed through the bridge and created a considerable swell. As soon as the boat began rocking in the swell the girls became frightened, stood up and clung to one another, which upset the boat only a few feet from the end of the draw. Persons on the draw were able to reach two girls and save them. A man named Rock jumped in from the bridge and saved two more, and William Wolff swam to the pier of the bridge. Meantime the shrieks of the girls in the water were piercing while they clung to Berry and dragged him down with them. It all happened so quickly that help with boats was impossible. The news spread like wildfire and fully 5,000 people gathered at the scene. Grappling was begun and one after another of the bodies were pulled out and laid in a row on the bridge, where they were surrounded by weeping and wailing relatives. It is rumored that the day bridge-tender kept the draw open for the purpose of collecting a patronage for ferrying passengers across. Threats of lynching him are frequent and he is keeping concealed.

The names of the drowned are: Lena Wardle, aged twelve; Augusta Wardle, aged fifteen; Emma Bowerman, aged eighteen; Johanna Mischl, aged twenty; Louis Bichl, aged about twenty-five; Phillip Berry, the night bridge-tender, aged eighteen years, nephew of H. L. Bacon, the Wisconsin Central freight agent.

WILKESBARRE, PA., Sept. 3.—A terrible accident occurred yesterday morning at the Oakwood shaft, operated by the Lehigh Valley Coal Company. The cage on which nine miners were being lowered into the shaft had nearly reached the bottom, when a mass of loose coal and rock fell from the side of the shaft into the pit, striking and completely demolishing the cage, which was made of heavy timber and iron-work, and instantly killing four of the men, besides wounding two others fatally and seriously injuring the three others in the party.

WAR ON THE CHINESE.

A Reign of Terror Inaugurated Among Celestial Miners in Wyoming—Driven to the Mountains by an Armed Mob—Seven of Their Number Killed—Their Houses Burned.

CHEYENNE, WY. T., Sept. 3.—The largest coal mines in the entire Union Pacific system are at Rock Springs, 259 miles west of Cheyenne. The company recently imported a large number of Chinese to take the places of the white men. Yesterday afternoon the entire force of white miners, about one hundred and fifty strong, organized, and arming themselves with shot-guns, marched to Chinatown. After firing a volley into the air they reloaded and ordered the Chinamen to leave. The order was obeyed at once, the Chinamen fleeing to the hills like a drove of sheep, closely pursued by the miners, who fired several volleys at the fugitives with fatal effect. The Chinese quarters were then set on fire and thirty-nine houses owned by the company there were destroyed with their entire contents. The miners next visited the various mines in the camp, unearthed all Chinamen at work therein, and bade them flee for their lives. Of four hundred Chinamen in Rock Springs yesterday morning not one remains. All are in the adjacent hills, heading for Green River, fourteen miles west. Seven were killed outright by shots fired by the miners, and many were wounded. It is said that several who were feeble and helpless from disease perished in the flames. Sheriff Young arrived from Green River on a special train last evening with a posse of deputies, but was too late to prevent the mob from carrying out their plans. After making sure of the departure of the celestials the miners dispersed and are now all quiet.

The Union Pacific officials appealed to Governor Warren for protection, and Assistant General Superintendent Dickinson and Superintendent Wurtele are en route for the scene of trouble by a special train. Both of these men are popular with the miners, and will probably be able to quell any disturbance likely to arise now. The Chinese have now been run out of Rawlins, Carbon, Laramie and other points in Wyoming.

A TRAIN RAIDED.

A Quartette of Masked Men, Evidently New at the Business, Board a Western Passenger Train and Rob Several Travelers.

KANSAS CITY, MO., Sept. 3.—As the west-bound train on the Chicago & Alton Road, on the way to this city, left Blue Springs, twenty miles from here, about nine o'clock last night, four masked men appeared at the smoking-car and were about to board it. A number of men, however, were standing on the platform and the robbers passed to the next car in line, the day car. Three of them climbed upon the forward platform and the fourth got on at the rear. A man then mounted guard at each end of the car, while the other two entered, and with drawn revolvers commanded the passengers to give up their money. A number of them handed out small amounts of change, while one man, in his excitement, passed out his purse containing twenty-three dollars. The robbers took whatever was offered, without searching passengers, and made no attempt to rob them of jewelry. When the pair had reached the middle of the car they became suddenly alarmed, and, pulling the bell-rope, the four robbers sprang off when the train slackened speed and disappeared in the darkness. The train passed on and the conductor, James Boggs, reported the affair to the officials of the road from the next telegraph station. The train then proceeded on its way to this city. The passengers on the other cars knew nothing of the matter until it was all over. Then there was great excitement among the timid, and many hastened to secrete their valuables and prepare for a return of the robbers, even though all danger had passed.

—About four years ago Mr. Gould, of Placer, Cal., received from the Agricultural Department a package of Japanese tea seed. He planted and carefully cultivated it and now at his ranch can be seen what is a curiosity in this country—a large plat of tea plants. They have done remarkably well, and he has raised quite a quantity of superior tea. The fine growth and excellent quantity of this tea looks as if its culture might be engaged in as a profitable business.—San Francisco Call.

—The pressure sufficient to rupture a blood vessel is much greater than to which they are ordinarily subjected. The carotid artery of a dog required from thirty-five to fifty-five times the normal pressure of the blood, and the jugular vein from thirty-two to thirty-five times.—Scientific American.

—It is now claimed that birds as nearly as possible imitate the nests in which they were reared, and bring to the work a sort of rudimentary education.

—Eating snails is the latest notion of those who like good living in London, and the snails are sold in French restaurants as "escargots."

The Public Debt Statement Shows a Decrease for the Month of August of $2,789,052.

Urging the Postmaster General to Revoke the Order Discontinuing Steamboat Mail Service—Fourth-Class Post-office Appointments.

ALL QUIET ON THE ASIATIC STATION.

WASHINGTON, September 2.—Rear Admiral Davis reports to the Navy Department that affairs are becoming quiet on the Asiatic station. The French and Chinese forces are being withdrawn. The pescadores have been given up and the Chinese flag raised. The obstructions in the Woo Sung, Min and Pearl rivers are being removed. Indications point to a reconciliation between England and Russia, preparations for active operations having stopped. Troops have evacuated Corea, and everything is quiet in that country.

The Secretary of the Treasury has been called upon to decide whether a $100,000 or $150,000 appropriation can be expended on the custom house at Richmond, Va. Congress passed a law for an extension costing $100,000.

The management of the American Exposition having conferred upon Major Charles S. Hill, of the State Department, whose economic writings are well known, the appointment of Commissioner of Consular and Diplomatic exhibits, in appreciation of his technical work in behalf of the Department's industrial exhibit last year, he has resigned his departmental duties to give his whole time to the interests of Southern industries.

The debt statement issued yesterday shows a decrease in the public debt for August of $2,789,052. The total debt now, less the $49,789,572 net cash reported in the treasury, is $1,472,692,307, and of this amount $1,260,776,912 is interest bearing debt.

The treasury statement shows a gold coin, bullion and certificate balance on hand of $120,871,927, or about $260,000 more than a month ago, and a standard silver dollar and silver certificate balance of $71,514,115, or about $3,000,000 more than a month ago. Custom receipts for August are $17,289,418, against $18,413,708 in August a year ago. Internal revenue receipts were $8,671,083, against $9,506,307 in August a year ago, and the miscellaneous receipts were but $1,703,758 against $2,446,492 in August a year ago. The total receipts last month were $28,064,260, or about three and a quarter million less than in August, 1884. The expenditures in August past were $22,912,525, or about $4,750,000 less than for August, 1884. For the two months of the current fiscal year the Government's receipts from all sources have fallen off about $6,000,000, compared with the corresponding months of the previous fiscal year, and expenditures have decreased $4,750,000.

The coinage executed at the mints of the United States during the month of August consisted of 204,000 double eagles, 2,447,000 standard dollars, 20,602 dimes; total, $6,590,165.20.

There are in the service of the Pension Bureau 2,200 examining surgeons. In many localities a single examining surgeon is appointed because the pension business of the locality is not sufficient to call for a regular board of three. Where the population and pension business justifies it a board is appointed. Up to the present there have been 558 changes made in the examining surgeons. Of the new appointees two-thirds are Democrats and one-third Republicans. Under the former regime the examining surgeons were all Republicans.

Of the 48,421 fourth-class postoffices in the United States about 6,400 new appointments have been made since March 4. The greatest number of changes in fourth-class offices have been made in Ohio, 618 appointments having been made in that State. New York comes next with 558; Indiana third, with 465; Virginia fourth, with 439; Pennsylvania, 415; Missouri, 361; Illinois, 329, and so on down to Alaska Territory, where one fourth-class postmaster has been appointed.

Oil Refinery Burned.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., September 2.—The works of Syracuse Oil Company, situated close to the Central Railroad tracks, caught fire yesterday morning. Augustus Valentine, an employe, was mixing varnish in the rear of the works, when the preparation caught fire, and in a moment the rear of the building was in flames. Before Valentine could get out of the way he was quite badly burned. The building contained 2,000 barrels of oil, and there were 3,000 barrels in tanks close by. The building and 2,000 barrels of oil were entirely destroyed. By the greatest effort the flames were kept from the tanks. A large force of men built an embankment to keep burning oil away from the Central Railroad property. The flames were got under control at one p. m. Had they reached the tanks there would have been a disastrous explosion. The works are a branch of the Standard Oil Co. The loss is about $25,000; no insurance.

Shooting Affair Between Tramps.

CORNING, N. Y., September 1.—Saturday two tramps, James Murray and Joseph Martin, had an altercation in the Dougherty Hotel, when Murray drew a revolver and shot Martin, the bullet taking effect over the latter's right eye, plowing through the skull and inflicting a serious, but not dangerous wound. Murray ran down the street and was pursued by a large crowd. He turned and fired several times, hitting a brakeman named Herrington, the ball taking effect in the latter's groin and making a very dangerous wound. Murray was finally captured and the officers had all they could do to keep the crowd from lynching him. He was lodged in jail and denies all knowledge of the shooting.

Inter-State Picnic.

HARRISBURG, PA., September 2.—The Inter-State picnic, which is an annual occurrence at William's Grove, Cumberland County, was formally opened yesterday. There were at least 10,000 people in attendance, and the indications point to an increased attendance during the remainder of the week. The exhibition of machinery and farming implements of all kinds is very large, all the prominent farmers in the eastern, and many in the western, States being represented. Yesterday afternoon an able address was delivered by the Grand Master of the State Grange, Leonard T. Rhone, of Centre. To-day John Norris, of the Philadelphia Record, will give special attention to anti-discrimination.

New York State Treasury.

ALBANY, September 2.—The amount of cash in the State Treasury yesterday was $2,588,583.05, divided as follows: General fund, $1,620,189.62; United States deposit fund, $193,672.12; Free School fund, $493,889.68; Military Record fund, $7,447.21; Canal fund, $397,619.67; College Land Scrip fund, $61,432.32. Total, $2,794,233.64. Deficiency—Common School fund, $153,539.61; Literature fund, $42,105.26. Total, $185,645.87. The disbursements during the month of August were $658,689.65, and receipts $666,716.80.

MOVING THE CATTLE.

Expiration of the Time Granted for the Removal of the Herds from the Disputed Territory—Ben Butler Asks an Injunction Against the President's Order, But is Refused.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 1.—The time fixed by the President for the removal of the cattle ranches in the Indian Territory expires to-day. Advices have been received indicating the purpose of the ranchers to comply with the terms of the proclamation to the best of their ability, and thousands of head of cattle are now on foot en route to other States and Territories. An impression is said to prevail among the cattlemen that the order of the President of August 14 calling for the removal of all fences on public lands will not be enforced. It is not the intention of the Secretary of the Interior to issue any general order in regard to the removal of fences from public lands, but it has been determined to deal with cases of violation of the law specifically. It is believed that better results will be thus obtained than from a general order, which would be looked upon as a proclamation bearing upon no one in particular. Special agents of the Land Office under instructions will report to the Department all cases of illegal fencing, and instructions looking to the removal of fences will be promptly furnished for their guidance in each case. The agent will effect the removal when he is directed to do so, and when necessary United States Marshals will be called upon through the Attorney-General. This action was taken yesterday upon a report of an agent showing that large tracts of the public lands were illegally fenced in Southern Colorado, adjoining the Kansas line.

NEW YORK, Sept. 1.—The mystery surrounding the visit of General Benjamin F. Butler to Block Island has been partly cleared up by Colonel George H. Cockhill, the son-in-law of Justice Miller, of the Supreme Court, who was present when the two distinguished men had their meeting. Colonel Cockhill said to an interviewer:

"There was no political significance in his coming, but a great deal of business which will, in the not remote future, make matters lively in the White House and elsewhere. The real cause of the visit was the order of President Cleveland directing the owners of cattle on the Indian lands in the West to vacate their grazing grounds. General Butler is himself one of the proprietors of a large ranch, and his clients and personal friends represent many millions of dollars of capital thus invested. The order is, therefore, of very great consequence and importance to them, and he was preparing to sue the President of the United States, and the object of his visit was to ask a preliminary order restraining the execution of the proclamation of the President until the questions involved could be determined by the courts. General Butler's object was to present the matter to Judge Miller, Judge Blatchford being absent from his circuit and not easy of access. General Butler presented very cogent reasons for some order that would protect them. The desired order was not issued, and I did not hear any of the conversation with Justice Miller about it, and I do not know what his views upon the question are. Now, about this order, there will surely be a fight; the cattle will not be moved. You couldn't move a colored plenipotentiary (?) alone five million head of cattle, to any proclamation issuing from the President or any one else. Important questions are involved—the rights of property, the power of the Indian to make contracts, and the power and authority of the Government to interfere. Of one thing rest assured: the cattle will stay; the fight will go on. We have no interest in this country. If a landlord wants to put you out of a house he goes to the courts, not to the President. If a contract has been violated we go to the courts, not to the Executive. As to what Justice Miller decided I do not know. He did not grant the injunction. No overt act had been committed. The President had simply issued an order. If nobody objected that was the end of it, unless he attempted to enforce it, and then another question would arise."

ST. LOUIS, MO., Sept. 1.—Cattlemen here, referring to the alleged application by General Butler to Judge Miller of the United States Supreme Court for an order restraining the execution of the President's proclamation clearing the ranches in the Cheyenne and Arapahoe reservations of cattle, say they think a mistake has been made, and if General Butler has applied for an injunction at all it refers to the order of the President for the removal of fences from the public domain. Mr. Frank B. York, President and manager of the Wichita Cattle Company, who returned from the reservation a few days ago, says he has heard of no such action having been taken by cattlemen. On the contrary, he says cattle are moving in every direction, that the cattlemen are using every means to comply with the President's order, that fully one-half of the cattle are already off the reservation, and the remainder will be out of it within thirty days. Mr. Pollard, of the law firm of Taylor & Pollard, who represent legally a large number of cattlemen, says he has no knowledge of such action, and thinks the injunction mentioned refers to the fence-moving order.

DISASTROUS STORMS.

Great Damage to Growing Crops by Hail and Rain in Ohio and New York.

WHEELING, W. VA., Sept. 1.—A terrific hail-storm passed over Belmont County, O., Sunday evening. The path of the storm was two miles wide, traveling from northwest to southeast. At Hendrysburg every window pane exposed toward the northwest was shattered. The storm lasted only five minutes, but raged with great fury. A flouring-mill was blown down. One-third of the corn crop has been destroyed, and fruit much injured. The tobacco crop suffered severely, many fields being completely ruined. The hailstones were of unusual size, a number being over six inches in circumference and a few measuring ten inches.

OSWEGO, N. Y., Sept. 1.—A severe hail-storm visited the southern part of Oswego County Sunday afternoon, inflicting damage which is estimated to be over $100,000.

SYRACUSE, N. Y., Sept. 1.—A severe hail-storm passed over northern Onondaga County Sunday, doing great damage to standing crops. The unharvested tobacco crop was almost wholly ruined, and the loss will reach high in the thousands.

ALBANY, N. Y., Sept. 1.—During the storm Sunday night two and a quarter inches of rain fell. Several land-slides on the Hudson River Road caused hindrance to trains. The farm lands along the base of the Helderbergs are under water, and the crops in many instances are ruined. The water broke through unfinished sewers in this city, causing the pavements to cave in.

Deadly Thunderbolts.

WASHINGTON, PA., Sept. 1.—Sunday afternoon William Miller, who lived near Lindley's Mills, Morris Township, was sitting on the porch in company with his wife, when a blinding flash of the electric fluid struck the house and killed the couple instantly. Miller was a well-to-do farmer and a respected citizen.

WAHPETON, D. T., Sept. 1.—During a rain-storm Saturday afternoon the barn of E. E. Rudner, three miles from here, was struck by lightning, which killed two men and injured two others. One of the men killed was George Emery, of St. Croix Falls. The names of the others are not known.

Five Persons Terribly Burned by an Explosion of Natural Gas.

PITTSBURGH, PA., Sept. 1.—Five persons were terribly burned yesterday morning by an explosion of natural gas in S. S. Marvin & Co.'s steam bakery. The firm recently introduced natural gas into their ovens, and this morning the five persons named were engaged in experimenting on the manufacture of a new line of goods. The gas had been turned off probably an hour, and about eleven o'clock Engineer Stafford advanced to the mouth of the oven to relight it. Instantly there was an explosion, and the flames shot out of the mouth of the oven, enveloping all in the room. Two of the injured will probably die from inhaling the gas.

Reports to the State Board of Health by eighty-three observers in different parts of the State, for the week ended on the 22d, indicated that intermittent fever, typho-malarial fever, erysipelas, diarrhea, neuralgia, tonsillitis and inflammation of the bowels increased, and dysentery and bronchitis decreased in area of prevalence. Diphtheria was reported at sixteen places, scarlet fever at seven and measles at two.

A farmer living west of Charlotte, Eaton County, reports a field of oats that averaged eighty-one bushels to the acre.

Ferdinand Yakoki, in jail at Frankfort, Benzie County, for murder, committed suicide by hanging shortly before the hour set for sentence a few days ago.

Prompt action on the part of physicians saved the life of Mrs. A. R. Daniels, of Vicksburg, Kalamazoo County, the other night. She had taken morphine, it was supposed with suicidal intent.

Leopold Stern, a Kalamazoo clothing merchant, was robbed of a $300 gold watch at a hotel in New York a few days ago.

There was a very severe thunder and rain-storm the other morning at Whitehall, Muskegon County. One dwelling-house was struck with lightning and burned to the ground.

Abner Meeker, of Millbrook, the oldest citizen of Mecosta County, died recently, aged one hundred years two months and two days.

Asa Waterhouse, aged sixty-three years, for fifty years a resident at Coldwater, was found dead in his garden the other night. A village in the county where he first settled bears his name.

Judge Thomas M. Cooley has been elected to the Chair of History in the Michigan University.

Thomas W. Filer, a Detroit business-man, in answer the other day to a bill filed by his supposed wife for divorce and alimony, set up the plea that he was not married to the plaintiff and that his children by her were illegitimate.

Four stores, a dwelling, skating-rink and billiard-hall at St. Ignace, Mackinac County, were destroyed by fire the other night, entailing a loss of $20,000, with small insurance.

Judd Crouch raised 80,000 bushels of wheat this year off the Crouch homestead in Jackson County, the scene of the great murder in 1883.

The barge Iosco was burned to the water's edge at East Tawas a few nights ago, and was a total loss. About 275,000 feet of lumber and 250,000 shingles were destroyed.

One night recently ice to the thickness of an eighth of an inch formed at Ishpeming.

A Grand Army Post was organized at Northville, Wayne County, the other night, with twenty-two charter members. Private Brownell, who killed Jackson, the proprietor of the hotel at Alexandria, Va., where Colonel Ellsworth was shot, was present and made a short address.

The other morning the infant child of Charles Sullivan, of Detroit, died, apparently, and was prepared for burial. Fifteen hours after, while the family and friends were gathered about the casket, the baby began to cry, frightening nearly every one from the house. The father retained his senses and took the child from the coffin, and it had since been in better health than for some time.

Thirty pioneers have died in Eaton County during the past year.

Freeman S. Cargan and wife were, nine years ago, sentenced to life terms in the Jackson and Ionia prisons, respectively, for the murder of Charles Smith. They were convicted on the testimony of Smith's widow, who was herself condemned to ten years' imprisonment as an accessory. Just before her death, which occurred recently in the Detroit House of Correction, Mrs. Smith confessed that her testimony against the Cargans was a pure invention. Mrs. Cargan's sentence had been commuted, and it was expected that her husband would soon receive a pardon.

The other day a farmer living about three miles southeast of Galesburg, Kalamazoo County, took a load of hay to Battle Creek. While there "tangle-foot" got the better of him. He reached home the next day without hay, horses or wagon, and does not know what became of them or how he reached home.

T. Nash, of Chicago, a somnambulist, while stopping at a hotel in Kalamazoo arose the other night, partly dressed himself and went into the street. He was found asleep at two o'clock in the morning on the sidewalk half a mile from his hotel. He had been robbed of his gold watch and ninety dollars in money.

George A. Britton, a prosperous farmer living three and a half miles south of Maple Rapids, Clinton County, committed suicide by shooting himself in the mouth with a shot-gun the other afternoon. Temporary insanity was the cause. He leaves a wife and two children.

The date of the Petersburg (Monroe County) Fair has been changed to October 7, 8 and 9. Five hundred dollars in cash premiums are offered.

The gold-mining fever is raging with such violence in the Upper Peninsula that it is difficult to tell what is rumor and what is fact in the matter of recent discoveries. A big find is reported at Morgan, six miles from Negaunee, an assay showing that the rock, which is hard quartz, carries twenty-three dollars in copper, twenty-one dollars in silver, and three ounces of gold to the ton.

A Finlander named Matt Thompson was instantly killed the other morning in Pack, Wood & Co.'s mill at Oscoda, Iosco County, by a car-load of timber falling upon him. He had a wife and family in Finland, which he was supporting.

CHARLEVOIX, : MICHIGAN.

THE FUNNY MAN'S BABY.

I.

The funny man went to his desk to write,
He had wrote ... all day, he would write all night,
And he ... his work, so he trimmed the light.

II.

In the room adjoining his baby lay,
And the girl she was slowly passing away
And would die ere the light of another day.

III.

So he wrote, with his heart in the other room,
And thought of the babe going out in the gloom
To the shadowy land beyond the tomb.

IV.

It was hard to write with death so nigh,
But he ground out jokes as the hours went by,
And closed each page with a brief-born sigh.

V.

It was hard to write, but the world must laugh,
So he penned the rhyme and the paragraph,
And even a humorous epitaph!

VI.

His pen flew fast, and the hours went on
Till his night of hell was almost gone,
And the east showed the first fatal streaks of dawn.

VII.

Then he dropped his pen and raised his head;
"Now the column is finished," the funny man said,
And the nurse, coming in, said: "The baby is dead."

A CROSS-EYED LOVER.

The Awful Mistake Made by Miss Eugenia Philpot.

My great-grandfather always said he would never trust or employ a cross-eyed man, for the Lord had set His mark on the fellow, and that was enough for him. Now my great-grandfather is dead—has been dead for some years—and I don't like to contradict his opinions, because he can't take his turn at opposing mine; but I do think he would have allowed that there are exceptions to the rule. Surely Mr. Augustus Holloway, the artist, was such an exception, for a more modest, kindly, sincere and generous person I never knew, yet his eyes crossed in the most aggressive and perplexing way ever beheld; nor could any curious or scientific observer fully describe the relative position of these organs; for if you undertook to stare at them, you never knew that one eye was not sternly glaring at you with rebuke, and, indeed, it generally was. Augustus did not like to be inspected; deformities naturally make their possessors sensitive and his had been a source of much trouble to him, for his eyes looked so many ways that he was held accountable for wandering glances that he never sent or meant.

Once, at an artists' reception, he was collared and dragged into the anteroom by a fiery and untamed young naval officer, who considered that this cross-eyed creature had stared at his betrothed too persistently for endurance, while really Mr. Holloway was intently studying light and shade on a canvas far to one side and above the shrinking damsel's head, with a view to writing his annual report of this "interesting occasion" for a daily newspaper. It took several minutes and the intervention of four agonized friends to rescue Augustus from the impending cane of Lieutenant Black, and make that gallant tar understand the great obliquity of his victim's vision; but, alas! no apologies could heal the wounded spirit, for the trouble was to be life-long, and who knew how often he might provoke punishment and how rarely escape from it? The experience opened to him an awful vista.

He could not be cured by surgery—that had been tried in vain; and it was equally vain for him to try to keep his eyes on some inanimate thing when there was danger of his offending, for the eyes themselves were recusant; and even in church, if one regarded the preacher, the other shot dark glances among the pews.

He was upbraided by young lovers for watching their shy billing and cooing when he was really eyeing and talking to the disapproving dowager opposite him to attract her attention away from the doves.

He narrowly escaped an experience at the police court because, while he was buying cologne at a druggist's, "he cast one of them heyes of his'n right into the safe I was a hopenin', 'stead of mindin' his hown business," as the new clerk testified in court when that safe, the very next night, had been opened and robbed. It was lucky for Augustus that he had dealt with the shop-man who sold him his 4711 Rue de la Cloche farina for the last ten years, and even the judge smiled when that disgusted clerk rebutted the little Englishman's testimony with, "Oh, nonsense! that was Mr. Holloway, the painter; he'd have been glad enough to throw both of his eyes into the safe, if they'd come out straight; but he wasn't even lookin' into it, for he said to me, when I give him the co-logne, 'What's that green stuff in the top jar?—it's a lovely tint!'"

Poor Augustus! to repeat his adventures would take longer than the Arabian Nights, and be far more monotonous for they all hinged on those unhinged eyes. But worst of all, he fell one fine day, not in a ditch or chalk-pit, but recklessly fell in love. There were two Misses Philpot living in the numerical-named street round the corner from his studio. I do not and dare not give the real name of the street, lest some fearfully veracious person should directly set to work and prove that there never was such a street, and no house with that aspect and plan in that street, and no Philpots ever lived in that street or house either. I am willing to give it up on the Philpots, and to own that I have supplied them with a new name for this occasion only, and—that I should have said there were three Misses Philpot, but I really forgot the elder, who was a very good, elderly woman, and did much charitable work in connection with Dr. Sling's church, but is of no importance to us, though it caused some trouble, hereinafter to be expounded, to our hero, that there should be a Miss Philpot, as well as two Misses Eugenia Philpot, aunt and niece.

Not that they were ever confused in their own household, for the aunt was always called Jenny—ignominious travesty of a stately name, but still having its own conveniences. Eugenia the niece was a girl of eighteen, and really exquisitely lovely, with a complexion of pinks and snow rather than roses and lilies, so transparent was her fair skin and so delicate the color that mantled beneath it; her hair, profuse, long, silky, and just rippled enough to show its brightness, was a silvery flax-color, barely touched with gold on the edges of the aforesaid ripples—hair that really defies description, its tint and texture were both so peculiar, and so accentuated by the delicate dark eyebrows and heavy dark lashes of the most beautiful gold-hazel eyes ever set in a girl's head.

Eugenia Philpot would have made a great sensation in society had she entered its charmed precincts, for nature had given to her also a sweet child-like face and a delicate graceful figure, tact enough to make her pass muster anywhere, not an oppressive amount of brains, and such a kind honest little heart!

"A perfect woman nobly planned"—
"to comfort," certainly, but warning and commanding would never be her forte. But although the Philpots were that deadly respectable sort of people, "an old New York family," the branch of Philpots to which they belonged had outlived its money, if not its usefulness. It amounted to just so much to them, this antiquity of descent, that they owned the house they lived in, which their grandfather had kept in his own hands, being the end house of a block he had built on the last remaining corner of the Philpot Manor. Their father had just money enough to live on decently, and some of this was lost in his bad management; his two daughters and his granddaughter now starved genteelly on the remainder.

Perhaps more meat and milk would have rendered Eugenia less ethereal and less bewitching; as it was, she could not exploit that wonderful beauty in society, for the prosaic reason that she could not afford the needful clothes. She had a pretty taste in dress and deft fingers, and that resource of every modern heroine, a trunk in the garret, was not altogether wanting. But, alas! there was very little in that trunk available for her. These aunts had a prior claim to it; and if there was a dark blue "Turk satin," as our grandmothers called it, left for the girl, there was mighty little of it and she had to buy a remnant of serge to eke out her Sunday costume, and also a cheap bunch of steel blue feathers to adorn the little bonnet made out of one old hanging sleeve. Now Miss Philpot privately took fine sewing from a ladies' furnishing store, and toned her clothes to the lowest key of sombreness that she might have a little to give in charity. But when you are fifty years old, Seraphina, and have a large Dutch nose, thick pale lips, a sallow skin, and prominent green gray eyes, nobody will notice what you wear if you are a saint; and Miss Philpot, who inherited the name of Annetje from that "old New York family," was as near a saint as modern manners permit.

Miss Jenny Philpot had a taste in dress, too. She was "only" thirty-five, and had a certain style and poise about her, a still supple and elegant figure, and an abundant length of flaxen tresses that pleased her own eye, and made her forget that her face was as thin as a hatchet; her nose (a truly aristocratic nose, she imagined), high, sharp and aggressive, her eyes cold and pale; her lips a narrow red line; and her chin long and obstinate, not even lit by a dimple—for where could a dimple have found depth enough to lurk in those wan cheeks or that lean and flabby countenance? But Miss Jenny made the most of herself, since she had long ago resolved that her duty and destiny was to marry; not perhaps to marry well (that was her niece's role), but to marry somebody who could support her in comfort—a modest wish, but so far ungranted.

Now Eugenia, who had a middle initial that meant nothing, but was merely a letter put in so that her clothes should not be marked or her correspondence directed with her aunt's name, had a good deal of taste in drawing, and loved pictures; she would have liked to be educated in that direction, but could not afford a master, and her aunts shuddered at the thought of sending their only and orphaned niece to the Cooper Institute, where none of the old New York families ever sent their scions. So they consoled her by the promise of a ticket to the Academy's annual exhibition; and it was in those rooms, clad in that very gentian blue costume, that Augustus Holloway first beheld the lovely creature, who struck him dumb with love at first sight.

He followed her about and stared at her incessantly, but she did not know it; she observed his peculiar aspect, but thought he was admiring the pictures, too, and in her gentle heart she pitied the poor man who looked so dreadfully, and thought of him no more. But, alas! Augustus never from that hour thought of anybody else but Eugenia. His soul was bent on one object thereafter; and by some of the artful devices known to the stronger sex when they fall captive to the tender passion—devices which, of course, women never need to use, and therefore do not understand—he managed in the course of six or eight weeks to discover Eugenia's name, her residence, the particulars of her family, and at last, through the good offices of a heavy but impecunious old gentleman who was Miss Jenny's godfather in his better days, and still kept up a friendly interest in his old friend's daughters (though he could not help them, being scarcely able to help himself), Augustus obtained an introduction to Jenny, and began to haunt the premises after the fashion of ardent lovers.

Shy with the new passion, he behaved himself with such respect and discretion that Miss Jenny's heart began to flutter with delight. Here now was her opportunity at last; here was a respectable gentleman, an artist, moreover, and as old Mr. Van Voorst had assured her, possessed of a nice little property aside from the profession he had chosen from pure devotion to art, who had, moreover, asked for an introduction, and on some pretext or other taken to calling twice a week at least.

To be sure, he was not handsome; indeed, he was rather odd-looking; but Miss Jenny had arrived at the age when the old legend tells us maidens in despair cry out in their last prayers to St. Catherine: "Oh, give us anybody!" So she accepted the situation, and began to prink and plume herself like an elderly robin who has outlived a cold, mateless spring, but prepares herself for later opportunities; she drew from the sachet-scented drawers of her bureau certain bits of lace hoarded to yellowness; she skimped the daily milk to buy remnants of bright or delicate ribbons, and fashioned for her head and throat confections, as the French say, of a mildly coquettish nature, to set off the old black silk she had sponged and turned, after the counsel of the old Yorkshire dame to her tailor concerning the remodeling of her petticoat: "Thoo mun bin' me't, and thoo mun tap bin' me't; thoo mun turn it rangeld afoor, tap'd be'tom, insid oot."

But the black silk came up nobly to her requisitions, and fitting closely to her still elegant figure, and garnished abundantly with some well-darned black lace, altogether gave her a charming aspect, that might well have touched Augustus Holloway's heart had it not been already enslaved totally by Eugenia.

That lovely young creature had not the least idea of her conquest, however, it is true, she was generally in the room when Mr. Holloway came to call, always entering sooner or later, because Aunt Jenny's extreme propriety forbade her to receive a gentleman alone, and Miss Philpot was never at home in the evening; she went to three church services on Sundays, Wednesdays and Fridays, and the other four evenings of the week she spent in sewing schools or night classes connected with Dr. Sling's church. Augustus Holloway met her more than once sallying out alone, protected by her black poke bonnet, her long shabby cloak, and her countenance from any possibility of insult, though she threaded Baxter street itself, or the slums about her favorite mission school, but he supposed her to be some seamstress or other; it never entered his head that Aunt Jenny was not Miss Philpot.

Poor Aunt Jenny! she was trying so hard to reciprocate Augustus' passion, and such things happened to make the way hard!

"Isn't he funny-looking, Aunt Jenny?" had been Eugenia's first comment on their new acquaintance. Her aunt took a high moral stand with the girl at once.

"My dear, don't say such a thing. It is very unfortunate for the poor man, but he was made so, and you should pity, not smile at him."

Eugenia meekly assented, and thought how sweet an old dear Aunt Jenny was; but as Augustus became better known to her, it seemed to the girl that his face grew more dreadful; the rolling of those dark eyes in their eccentric orbits had a sort of fascination that drew her gaze; she could not help it; she became capable even of amusing herself during the prim and lofty conversations which took place between him and her aunt by guessing what he might be looking at. Aunt Jenny had no earthly doubt that his eyes were fixed upon her, with tacit if oblique tenderness; but to Eugenia he seemed to be inspecting and criticising the appointments of the rather dingy parlor, its very old red flock paper, carved and hair-cloth-seated mahogany furniture, and venerable pier-glass with its tarnished and elaborate gilt frame.

But all the while those uncertain eyes were really devouring the girlish loveliness opposite him, or her painted counterfeit; for the sole adornment of the room was a full-length portrait of Eugenia's mother in her bridal dress of glittering white satin—a picture by one of the best artists of her time, and so like the daughter that Holloway supposed it was Eugenia's portrait.

He was mightily flattered by that young lady's persistent attention; that blessed (if temporary) forgetfulness of our own deformities and shortcomings which nature bestows on us as a sort of moral anæsthetic helped him here; he did not pause to remember that he was ugly enough to draw the attention of a crowd; he only hoped, not without trembling, that he had found favor in the sight of his goddess, and it was a real basking in the sun-rays to him when he found those lovely eyes fixed upon him hour after hour.

Once, while she was silently speculating upon the possibilities of his walking straight in a field of wood where the pavement would not guide his feet, Aunt Jenny said, in her sharpest voice:

"Eugenia, don't you hear Mr. Holloway speak to you?"

The girl started, and colored freshly, like a rose when the sudden wind shakes off the dews of dawn. She had heard his voice, to be sure, but he certainly was eyeing the wall on one hand and her aunt on the other, to her idea. She apologized and answered, and the enraptured Augustus dreamed of that blush, that smile, that lute-sweet voice all night, quite oblivious of the dulcet tones in which Aunt Jenny had said:

"She is a dreaming child, dear Mr. Holloway; pardon her, I beg!"

Day by day Mr. Holloway nursed this passion, till at last he grew desperate. It was spring by this time; the florists' shops were full of soft color and delicate perfume in heaps of tea rosebuds and bunches of fragrant violets, for spring is a divinity who knows no limits, but has her altars the world over, and defies brick and mortar to exclude her reign; and in the spring, we all know, on the authority of Alfred, Lord Tennyson, whither a young man's fancies turn, even if they have turned thither all winter, in spring they are fired with new zeal. Bunches of blossoms, not bouquets, but real careless glowing handfuls on their own long stems, were daily left at the dingy Philpot mansion, and offered incense in that stuffy faded parlor, putting the dull flock paper out of countenance, and flouting the slippery hair-cloth, the sombre mahogany, the thread-bare carpet, until Aunt Jenny preened her own dusky plumage, and emerged from that black silk into cheap but dainty cambrics, and the last relic of her grandmother, a silver gray silk, that, illustrated with some old thread lace, bloomed anew, and made the wearer, with the faint flush of gratified vanity on her thin features, and the wilder crimping and coiling of her sandy locks, look much like one of the gray and fawn pigeons ambling and cooing on the roofs overhead. But, Eugenia, if she had been lovely in her one costume of blue, how angelical was she now in her fresh spring garments! always with a rose-bud or a knot of violets at her throat, for "another" had stepped into Mr. Holloway's foot-prints, and though he dared not adventure so far as this favored suitor, he could and did join Eugenia on the street corners, walk to the horse-car with her, and send her flowers, which Aunt Jenny would not appropriate, since they were but the tiny inconsiderable gifts of an impecunious young fellow, conveyed through the boy who came daily to feed the furnace and clean the shoes of these otherwise independent women.

What did Augustus Holloway know about clothes? It did not enter into his head that ten-cent calico could invest his goddess with such charm and purity, or that the blooms which gave her white and black, or pale lilac, or soft blue gowns their last touch of grace did not come from its own offerings; he only knew that she grew more bright and beautiful in his eyes every day, and he hoped with masculine self-confidence that she reciprocated his passion, while every day Aunt Jenny grew more attached to him, more certain of his faithful devotion to her.

But Augustus, besides his eyes, had one other slight defect; in boyhood he had stammered fearfully, and it had required skillful and patient medical treatment to free him from this impediment of speech. He was freed, however; only a certain deliberation was noticeable in his manner, except in moments of strong feeling or excitement when he sputtered and sent out inarticulate moans very unpleasant and quite unintelligible, so he resolved to make his proposal to Eugenia by letter.

How delighted Aunt Jenny was when a manifestly masculine epistle was taken out of the letter box and brought to her, those only can know who have been placed in her expectant position.

Yes, there was "Miss Eugenia Philpot," in the manly script she felt sure was his; and fluttering, yet joyful, she opened the envelope, and perused its contents with a burst of happy tears. Let us draw a veil over these virginal emotions, more sweet than bitter; their result is all we have to do with, and that was a truly elegant note dispatched at once to Mr. Augustus Holloway, at the —— Street Studio, No. ——, and containing, in faint, spidery characters, the delicate intimation that Miss Eugenia Philpot would be happy to see him that afternoon at her residence in Blank Street.

The enraptured lover seemed to himself like one who walks the air, when, dressed with the greatest elegance man can achieve in his limited possibilities, he set out for the dwelling of his adored one. He was rather disconcerted to find only Aunt Jenny, blushing as well as she could, casting down her eyes, furtively and hysterically tittering behind her handkerchief, and extending her hand to him with coy demonstration of welcome. Still, it was proper enough; she was Eugenia's guardian, and no doubt ought to interview him first. He submissively recognized the use and want of the matter, and gallantly handing her to the tall chair, sat down in front of her on the sofa, and proceeded to business. Aunt Jenny had expected some manifestation of his affection, but, on the whole, was relieved by their absence, being unused to such frivolities; and Mr. Holloway began:

"Dear madame, I-I-I am here, as y-y-you well know, to s-s-sue for the hand and heart of the lovely creature before me"—glaring with all his might at the picture of Eugenia's mother, but appearing to look at Aunt Jenny, with a fire of rapture in the eye so occupied. Poor Aunt Jenny! She blushed, rose, and so did Augustus. He thought she was about to open the door and introduce Eugenia; she thought he intended to fall at her feet like lovers in novels. He advanced; so did she, intent on picking him up from his knees. But seeing his arms expand—really he was brandishing them toward the door—she thought it a prelude and an invitation, and, to his astonishment, fell upon his neck with a loud sniff of joy.

"O-h!" said Augustus, dropping his arms by his side, still thinking this but a gush of maternal feeling. "Wh-wh-where is Eugenia? Wh-wh-where is my angel?"

Miss Jenny recoiled as one stung by a snake. She tottered backward, intending to fall into her chair and face the horrible situation; but, alas! that antique chair had the most lively and rapid casters that were ever affixed to chair legs. Her hoop, small though it was, hit the edge of the seat as she retreated, and with that slight impetus the chair spun half a yard backward, and this elegant, heart-broken maiden lady sat heavily and unexpectedly down—on the floor.

"Wh-wh-wh-ere is my Eugenia?" went on the excited Holloway; and, as if to answer the question, the door opened and Eugenia—yes, Eugenia—with a handsome young fellow behind her, entered upon the scene. The tableau was too much for them; the angel giggled aloud, the young man echoed her amusement from under his silky dark mustache. Augustus seemed to survey even the cobwebs on the cornice, as well as all the tarnished gilt fleurs-de-lis on the flock paper, so fearfully did his eyes roll. Miss Jenny gave a hysterical shriek—the truth dawned upon her. Eugenia had chosen her own lover, and his eyes were dark, straight of vision, keen and merry. Augustus was heart-broken; and she, well-bred, well-born, fastidious, prim Eugenia Philpot, commonly called Aunt Jenny, had made an irremediable, an awful mistake.

Of which the moral is, according to my deceased great-grandfather: Avoid men with cross-eyes. According to me: Aunts, expect not to have lovers when you have lovely nieces beside you, or you may miserably repeat poor Miss Philpot's awful mistake.—Rose Terry Cooke, in Harper's Bazar.

LIFE ON THE FARM.

The Drudgery of Farm, Not Equal to That of City Life.

As to its drudgery—whatever has been the case in the past, when stumps were to be pulled and mortgages were to be lifted from almost every field; when it was a long way to market, and the buyer paid for produce in "trade," when almost all instruments were laboriously hewn out at home or clumsily hammered out by the village blacksmith—there is, happily, less drudgery on the farm now and less need of it every year. Taking the year through, the working hours of a man on a farm are no longer than those of the section hand on the railway, or the artisan in the shop who had his own garden to hoe before breakfast and after supper. The busy lawyer and the doctor in average practice work longer and harder than the farmer. The grocer and the bookkeeper each sees less of his children in their working hours than the farmer, who sometimes envies the above their "easy life." It must be conceded, of course, that the profits of farming are not so large on an average as those which are realized by men who are successful in mercantile or professional life, but such as they are they are surer, twenty fold surer, at least. Large profits are always contingent to large risks. One must not expect the same rate of interest from Government bonds as he does from mining stocks. The wear and tear, the losses and defeats of business men in the last ten years, have been the experience that no farmer need cover. Cities are full of men who had visions of a business success that would in monthly profits put to shame the small profits of a farmer's lifetime. On the home stretch of three score and ten they find themselves dependent for a livelihood on salaried positions, which they hold by a dismally uncertain tenure, or the precarious commission of a canvasser or a commercial traveler.

In comfort and income the lives they have led make a shabby working contrast with what they might have done as farmers, and point an important moral for the young men who are now debating whether they will turn their backs on the farm and try their luck in the lottery of city life.—*Bangor (Me.) A ONE-SIDED GAME.

The Bonanza That Greeted a London Organ-Grinder.

An amusing story is told of an American millionaire who recently honored London with a visit. As he was walking down one of the busiest of our streets one morning, his eye was attracted by an organ-grinder who was solemnly and industriously playing at the corner of a street. The top of the organ was covered with green cloth, and it was this green cloth that at once appealed to the intellect of the trans-Atlantic Crœsus. For him the green cloth suggested only one thought, and that thought was gambling. He fancied himself in the presence of some peripatetic roulette-player and he could not resist the temptation of taking a turn. So he stepped opposite the musical Italian and tossed a gold coin cheerily on the green surface of the hurdy-gurdy. The astonished foreigner stopped playing, grasped the coin, pocketed it, removed his hat, grunted out some voluble Tuscan thanks, and resumed his music. "Lost that time," the millionaire murmured to himself and produced another coin. He tossed it again upon the board, from which it was again no less promptly and no less gratefully removed by the delighted musician. The millionaire shook his head. "Ah, luck's against me," he remarked, as he sent a third gold coin to gleam for a moment upon the green surface before it rapidly disappeared in the Italian's pocket. Another and another coin went in the same way without wearing out the patience of the American. But at last when some six sovereigns had transferred themselves from his keeping to that of the organ-grinder, the American bent forward, and in a tone of the intensest curiosity whispered in the ear of the amazed Italian: "Say, stranger, what do you call this game, anyhow?"—Whitehall Review.

What Saved Him.

He was before Judge Fitzgerald on a charge of drunkenness, and he pleaded hard to be let off.

"I don't see why, your Honor, that you can't dismiss me," he said; "I wasn't so very drunk."

"Not so very, may be," replied the Judge, "but you made so much noise that everybody thought there was a political procession on the street, and it took six policemen and a patrol-wagon to get you to the station-house."

"You may be correct, your Honor, as I don't remember exactly what took place, but it doesn't occur very often."

"That's no excuse."

"But, Judge, you know I'm not before you oftener than once a year."

"I know it, and that's the very reason you don't have to go to the workhouse more than once a year. Thirty days. Next!"—Merchant Traveler.

Where She Found the Needle.

"Some twenty years ago," said the mild-faced stranger, "my wife, while sewing, suddenly missed her needle. She saw nothing more of it, and soon forgot all about her loss until last week, when——" "When she suddenly felt a pricking sensation in her right foot," suggested Boodle. "When the point of the needle showed itself between her shoulder-blades," guessed Coodle. "When the needle was seen protruding from her youngest daughter's left forefinger," intimated Doodle. "No," said the mild-faced stranger; "you are all wrong. She found it in a crack in the floor. It had been there all those years. Singular, wasn't it?" There was a common desire to weltor in the blood of the mild-faced stranger; but with difficulty Boodle, Coodle and Doodle restrained themselves.—Boston Transcript.

Rollo's father, who gets all his Latin from the back of the dictionary, said: "Very well, very well; I remember the passage well," and told Rollo he was glad to see that he made practical, every-day use of the classics as he studied them, as he presumed that was contemplated in Prof. Sock's method. He himself recalled with not only pleasure, but daily profit, the Latin he acquired when a boy at school. READING FOR THE YOUNG.

MY JOLLY PONY.

Did you ever see in your life such a fine
Fat fellow as this jolly pony of mine?
... up, Master Neddy, ho! ho!
Now see how he dances and prances away
As hard as he can, till I'm ready to say
"Whoa, whoa, Master Neddy! Whoa! Whoa!"

He'll trot or he'll canter, or gallop or pace,
He'll walk if I tell him, or dash in a race
And beat everything on the way.
And then he will stand, if I want him to wait,
Without moving, at the door or the gate,
As quiet, the whole of the day.

He never gives trouble, nor wants any care,
No one ever feeds him nor curries his hair
Or makes him a bed when it's night;
He never is skittish, nor balky—nor kicks,
Nor has a bad temper, nor any sly tricks,
But acts as a gentleman might.

There's only one thing I can tell you beside,
He's never a pony except when I ride!
But stands, till I want him again
Without ever moving, all day on the floor
Right there in the corner behind the hall door—
And then he is Grandpa's cane.

THE FIRE-ALARM.

How the Kitchen-Clock Happened to Get Cleaned.

Up in grandma's attic, one bright, sunny day, Lulu and Hetty were playing with their dolls.

It was such a charming place to play, with no end of old spinning-wheels, that the girls called their harps, and a big loom that they called their pipe-organ, and chests full of funny old dresses, that grandma allowed them to dress up in to their hearts' content and bandboxes with the queerest old bonnets.

Each kept house in one end of the attic, and then visited each other back and forth, and they always felt sure that before tea-time Mittie, grandma's help, would come toiling up the steep stairs with a tray full of goodies for a tea-party.

Lulu was sitting in an old, old rocking-chair, singing to sleep her youngest doll, Bonnibel, for Bonnibel had scarlet fever, with a touch of whooping-cough, and was very "worrisome."

As Lulu rocked far back in the old chair, softly singing "Daisy Dale," she chanced to glance up among the brown rafters, and her eye caught sight of a thin place in a shingle, where the sun shone through, making a spot as red as blood.

"Hetty Warren," she said slowly and with emphasis, "this house is a-fire!"

"Where? where?" cried Hetty, rushing along from her end of the attic, leaving a trail of doll's dresses and clothing generally in her wake.

"Up there!" gasped Lulu, pointing with one trembling finger at the red spot.

Hetty looked up and saw; then turning, she fled down stairs as swift as a bird, while Lulu came, panting and breathless, after her.

Into the sitting-room burst Hetty, surprising grandma, as she sat there sewing with the little girls' two mothers, by the startling announcement: "The house is afire! the house is afire!"

"Where? Where is it?" they all cried at once, jumping up.

"Up in the roof!" said Hetty, and Lulu, panting in just then, added her testimony: "The house is all afire up in roof, all red coals!" and Mittie came rushing in from the kitchen to hear what the tumult was about.

"Run out into the street and holler 'Fire!' Mittie," said grandma.

"Tell somebody to ring the fire-bell, Hetty," said her mother, seizing a pail of water and hurrying up stairs.

Lulu's mother was one of the kind who faint easily, so she dropped into a chair and groaned, and fanned herself with a newspaper, looking all the while as white as a ghost, and Lulu clung tight to her apron.

Grandma took a China cup down off the bracket, and, rushing out into the back-yard, set it down under a big apple-tree, then hurrying in, went to taking down the kitchen clock.

Mittie ran into the middle of the street and stood there trying to scream "Fire!" but though she opened her mouth wide, the "Fire!" only came in a loud, hoarse whisper.

Hetty went tearing along the sidewalk, looking for some one to ring the fire-bell. The first man she met was old Judge Brown.

"O Mr. Brown!" gasped Hetty, "won't you go and ring the fire-bell?"

"What's a-fire?" asked the Judge.

"Grandma's house is a-fire and grandma's away, and I don't know what we shall do!"

Judge Brown stared hard at the house with no traces of smoke about it, and looked puzzled.

"Where is it a-fire?"

"Up in the roof—it's all live coals—red as blood."

"I'll run along where I can see the other side of the roof," said Judge Brown, and along he ran as fast as his age and flesh would allow, with Hetty still ahead. He ran clear around the house, watching the roof, but no sign or smell of fire could be discovered.

"Must be inside," he said and went in at the front door, and there was Hetty's mother coming down-stairs laughing, with the pail of water in her hand. She explained to the Judge how the little girls at play in the attic had seen a red spot in the roof, and thought it was fire.

"Come in, Mittie!" she called to the girl, who was now leaning against the fence, all in a tremble. "There's no fire, after all."

"Well," said grandma, when they brought the good news into the kitchen. "I've got this clock about taken down, so I'll finish the job, and send it off to be cleaned. It hasn't run for a year."

And that was how the kitchen-clock happened to get cleaned.—Youth's Companion.

A PLEASANT WALK.

Miss Sophia and Little Letty's Adventure in the Fields.

"Where are you going, Miss Sophia?" asked Letty, leaning over the gate.

"I am going to walk," answered Miss Sophia. "Would you like to come with me, Letty?"

"Oh, yes!" cried Letty. "I should like to go very much, indeed! Only wait, please, while I get my bonnet!" And Letty danced into the house and danced out again with her brown poke bonnet over her sunny hair. "Here I am, Miss Sophia!" she cried. "Now, where shall we go?"

"Down the lane," said Miss Sophia, "and through the orchard into the fields. Perhaps we may find some wild strawberries."

So away they went, the young lady walking demurely along, while the little girl frolicked and skipped about, now in front, now behind. It was pretty in the green lane; the ferns were so soft and plumy, and the moss so firm and springy under their feet. The trees bent down and talked to the ferns, and told them stories about the birds that were building in their branches; and the ferns had stories, too, about the black velvet mole who lived under their roots, and who had a star on the end of his nose.

But Letty and Miss Sophia did not hear all this; they only heard a soft whispering, and never thought what it meant.

Presently they came out of the lane, and passed through the orchard, and then came out into the broad, sunny meadow.

"Now, Letty," said Miss Sophia, "use your bright eyes and see if you can find any strawberries. I shall sit under a tree and rest a little."

Away danced Letty, and soon she was peeping and peering under every leaf and grass-blade; but no gleam of scarlet, no pretty clusters of red and white could she see. Evidently it was not a strawberry meadow. She came back to the tree and said:

"There are no strawberries at all, Miss Sophia, not even one. But I have found something else; wouldn't you like to see it?—something very pretty."

"What is it, dear?" asked Miss Sophia. "A flower? I should like to see it, certainly."

"No, it isn't a flower," said Letty, "it's a cow."

"WHAT?" cried Miss Sophia, springing to her feet.

"A cow!" said Letty. "A pretty spotted cow. She's coming after me, I think."

Miss Sophia looked in the direction in which Letty pointed, and there, to be sure, was a cow, moving slowly toward them. She gave a shriek of terror; then, controlling herself, she threw her arms around Letty.

"Be calm, my child!" she said; "I will save you! Be calm!"

"Why, what is the matter, Miss Sophia?" cried Letty, in alarm.

Miss Sophia's face was very pale, and she trembled; but she seized Letty's arm and bade her walk as fast as she could.

"If we should run," she said, in a quivering voice, "it would run after us, and then we could not possibly escape. Walk fast, my child! Don't scream! Try to keep calm!"

"Why, Miss Sophia!" cried the astonished child. "You don't think I'm afraid of that cow, do you? Why, it's"——

"Hush! hush!" whispered Miss Sophia, dragging her along. "You will only enrage the cow by speaking loud. I will save you, dear, if I can! See, we are getting near the fence. Can't you walk a little faster?"

"Moo-oo-ooo!" said the cow, which was now following them at a quicker pace.

"Oh! Oh!" cried Miss Sophia, "I shall faint! I know I shall! Letty, don't faint, too, dear! Let one of us escape. Courage, child! Be calm! Oh, there is the fence. Run, now—run for your life!"

The next minute they both were over the fence. Letty stood panting, with eyes and mouth wide open; but Miss Sophia clasped her in her arms, and burst into tears.

"Safe!" she sobbed. "My dear, brave child! we are safe!"

"Yes I suppose we are safe," said the bewildered Letty. "But what was the matter? It was Uncle George's cow, and she was coming home to be milked!"

"Moo-oo-ooo!" said Uncle George's cow, looking over the fence.—St. Nicholas.

FEMININE FOLLIES.

Wherein English and American Women Differ in Extravagant Ideas of Dress.

There is one crying sin, however, of which the English women of this generation are more guilty than their American sisters, and that is the sin of tight lacing. The waists of the majority are absurdly drawn in, the more absurdly because it destroys the roundness and perfection of the English figure. The elderly Englishwoman runs to flesh; so does the elderly American; and in time each of them learns to accept the fact, and sinks down into comfortable age with its attendant inches and avoirdupois. But the natural size of a waist to accompany a thirty-six or thirty-eight inch bust measure would be twenty-three or twenty-four inches, and when it is reduced by compression to from eighteen to twenty inches this is an actual loss of beauty of form as well as detrimental to the health. Doubtless there are some foolish girls and women in America who crowd their breathing apparatus into smaller space than nature intended; but, the average size of the American waist being less, there is perhaps less temptation to reduce it, and the general appearance of women in any large American city shows that the natural standard is more nearly preserved than in London at the present time. On the other hand, we sin more in the matter of bustles and tournures. Such a shelf of projecting bracket at the back of the skirt as may be seen any day and any minute of any day upon Broadway is not visible in any part of London. The extension of the dress is confined to ruffles and two or three steels at the back or to a pair of steels and a pad of small "mattress" fastened on the tailor-made (cloth) gowns to the skirt itself. Women of fashion have quite discontinued the use of the removable excrescence called the bustle nor could one be worn with the close side draperies which are so much used and which so perfectly outline the form.—*London Cor. AERIAL NAVIGATION.

Why It is Improbable That Man Should Be Able to Fly.

Painters who represent angels floating in the air with small wings may make a charming picture, but it is sadly unscientific. To carry the body of even a small woman, weighing, say, one hundred pounds, would require a machine at least four horse-power, as one horse-power would be required to move twenty-five pounds. This would call for wings, supposing we had the machine to work them, of enormous size. The birds found far out at sea, known as Mother Carey's chickens, seem to be large, but when killed, and the body stripped of feathers, it is not much bigger than a canary bird. And so of all birds capable of extended flight. Man's strength, it is estimated, would have to be increased some thirtyfold before he could fly, and then he would be forced to confine himself to dead calm weather. Currents of air have often a velocity of twenty miles per hour, a fact which shows how mighty must be the power man must command before he can launch himself upon the air and compete with even the slowest birds; yet it seems to be settled by scientists that air navigation must be by means of flight—that gas can never solve the problem. There must be an extremely powerful motor, and some apparatus that will do the same service for man that feathers and wings do for birds.—Demorest's Monthly.

KNOCKED OVERBOARD.

John Swalls Lost From the Schooner Ona Swalls Off South Haven.

Yesterday Joseph Swails of this place, received a letter from his brother Ed Swails, dated at South Haven, stating that his brother John of this place, was knocked overboard by the fore boom, about two miles off South Haven the day before. The body was not recovered. John Swails was about 21 years old and unmarried.

The schooner Mocking Bird sprung a leak off Little Island, Sunday and, was with difficulty kept free by the pumps until she could be got back to this port. She is being repaired and will proceed to Milwaukee soon.

The small wrecking schooner Experiment while recovering some old machinery from a wreck near Waugoshance light had her bow badly shattered by the explosion of dynamite that was being used to unloosen the machinery from the sunken wreck. She was hauled out at the Duncan City dry dock to be repaired.

The Genesta, which sails against the Puritan for the America's cup Wednesday and Friday, sailed in thirty four races last year and won seven of them. She generally failed in light winds, but since the matches of last year her spread of canvas has been largely increased, which will help her in light weather, but may be a disadvantage in a heavy blow.

GROVER CLEVELAND

An Open Letter to the President by a Disgusted Democrat.

To Grover Cleveland, President of the United States, Adirondack Forests, N. Y.—

Sir: I have been thinking for some time that I would address you a few lines, but feared that in the multiplicity of your official duties you would not have time to give me any attention. As you are now out of Washington, where you have plenty of leisure, I will take the liberty of presenting to you my thoughts in this open letter. I wish to ask you why it is that you have so much trouble to find suitable men for office. You are ruining our party by the fatal errors in your appointments. Your Administration has given a prominent position in Washington to a man named Higgins, who is denounced as a scoundrel by George William Curtis and all our Independent Mugwump friends, and he finds no defenders among our own party papers. Mulroy and O'Connor, one having served a term in the work house for stealing a dog and the other a term in the penitentiary for grand larceny, have received important Federal positions in Cincinnati. Mr Dunton, a Democrat of Maine, received an appointment from you as a postmaster while he was actually in jail for embezzling from the very post-office he preside over which you appointed him. You made a very bad mess in the matter of Mr C. B. Judd. He has been in the penitentiary twice, and was under arrest for horse-stealing when you elevated him to the position of Special Land Agent in Nevada. Evan Saint is known to have been twice convicted for violating the Pension laws, and indictment is now hanging over him for the same offense. Yet you have appointed him to be Special Pension Examiner. P. F. Kinion, who has been arrested nine times for violating the liquor laws of Rhode Island, has just been appointed postmaster at Valley Falls in that State. Another great mistake you have made was in appointing that man Keiley as Minister to Italy. You might have found some Democrat who could have represented us. The Republicans here say he is a mean Roman Catholic, and that you were forced to appoint him to please the Pope of Rome. He must be a very mean man if they won't have him in Italy and Austria, and you ought now to keep him home. Then, again, by your own admission you have appointed a disreputable Democrat to a position on a Federal bench, but for some reason you have neglected to give to the public the name of the man. You professed to be very indignant when you learned what you had done in this case, and attempted to excuse yourself by writing a stingingly sarcastic letter to one of the men who had signed the man's petition. If you had not written that letter nobody would have known that you had made such a mistake. As it is, you have advertised yourself as a dupe. We have not, however, heard of your removing this incompetent Judge from the bench, as you certainly should have done. The people in this section of the country are saying all manner of uncomplimentary things about you for this appointment. They say you should have investigated the man's record and not appointed him until you were satisfied that he was worthy of the place. Now, Mr. President, please for the sake of the party don't make another such a mistake.

We elected you President with the hope that you would "turn the rascals out," and we did not expect you to hunt up other and worse rascals to put in. You ought to understand your duties better. If you try, I believe you can find men in our party who have never been in jail and are as good Democrats as they who have been.

The pardon of Police Superintendent Mullen, of Cincinnati, has also injured us. Of course he did right in imprisoning the one hundred and thirteen niggers who wanted to vote the Republican ticket and he deserved well from his party for his valiant services. We Democrats of this section heartily indorsed Mullen's actions, and among ourselves we rejoiced to know that he is again a free man, still we think it would have been better for the party if you had not pardoned him until after our October election. It is likely to unite the nigger vote against us, and I am afraid it will make some of the Methodists whom we hoped would vote for Dr. Leonard stick to the Republican party just to condemn you.

Now, Mr. President, I am a life-long Democrat who hates a Republican as I hate poison, and I hope you will seriously consider my observations. You ought to be able to find Democrats to fill all the offices without going to the jails and the penitentiaries. If you can not, then you should leave the Republican office-holders until honest Democrats are found.—Thomas Johnson, in Cleveland Leader.

—"A well-known firm of booksellers in the Strand," says the Pall Mall Gazette, "have on view what must be, we should think, one of the largest and most expensive extra illustrated books in existence. It is a copy of Boydell's edition of Shakespeare's works, which by the insertion of many thousands of plates has been extended to thirty-six volumes. Some idea of the vast quantity of the plates and the labor involved in their collection may be gained from the price of the book, £1,500. It is said that this by no means represents the original cost price."

—All the money found in the possession of convicts at San Quentin, Cal., hereafter will be in violation of prison rules, and shall be forfeited by the Warden to the fund for the benefit of the prison library. This order repeals the Folsom order, made July 27, 1885. A fund has been established in which all money in the possession of a convict, or which he may earn, is to be deposited, and to be paid over only on his discharge, or the convict may send his earnings to his family.—San Francisco Chronicle.

—Medical item: "In some parts of South America people live to be over one hundred years old. There are no doctors there at all. Isn't that wonderful?" "It is not as wonderful as it is here in Texas," growled Colonel Peterby. "Here in Texas there are hundreds of doctors, and nevertheless a man occasionally lives to be one hundred years old. That is still more wonderful."—Texas Siftings.

—If London and Paris eventually keep clear of the cholera, or do as well as Paris did in 1884, the lesson of the scourge will be plainly written. "Work hard and keep clean." That is the watchword of modern civilization.—Current.

DEMOCRATIC DISCORD.

The Foolish Policy of the Democracy in Respect to Vital Questions.

It is urged by representative organs of the Democratic party that the conduct of that party in respect to vital public questions is in the last degree foolish. It is quarrelling all the time about Civil-Service reform, about the tariff, and about the silver question. By quarrelling thus it both weakens and disgraces itself, fails to carry out its pledges to the people, and renders the success of the Republican party hereafter altogether probable. If the Democratic leaders would develop some real policies, and if the party would stop quarrelling and concentrate its efforts upon such policies, the organs think it would be much more likely to succeed.

This is true, but what better could be expected? The party is what it is. It quarrels about the most vital questions of public policy, because it does not agree. It appears to be two, because it is not one. A great many of its members are sincerely and zealously in favor of "a clean sweep," because they imagine every Republican is a rascal; they want the public service thoroughly reformed, and in their ignorance believe that it can not be done except by the agency of Democrats occupying all the offices. At the same time, some other Democrats believe in Civil-Service reform, and know that the service has been more pure and efficient under the later Republican Administrations than ever before. Being honest these elements do not agree. Again, some believe that every duty that protects is a "robbery" of American industry. In their ignorance they conceive that the tariff is the great cause of industrial and commercial depression. Being sincere and earnest, these press their conviction in season and out of season, and hold that no man is or can be a good Democrat or a true patriot who hesitates to uproot any and every form or degree of "monopoly," by which, it is said, the few are helped at the expense of the many. Other Democrats, having broader knowledge or broader heads, know better. These as sincerely believe that it would be ruinous to the country, and especially harmful to its industries, to tear down the protective system. How is it possible for these people to agree? If they are both honest, they must be irreconcilably hostile to each other. And it is so, moreover, about the silver question. A great proportion of the Democrats sincerely believe that the country needs more money and cheaper money, and that disuse of silver robs "the debtor class," which embraces the many, for the benefit of "the creditor class," which embraces the few. Others know better, but how can these two agree?

These quarrels within the Democratic party are the only creditable thing about it. They prove that, though the party as a whole can not be said to have any honest aims or fixed convictions, many of its members have. It is infinitely more creditable to them to disagree, and to combat each other openly, than to attempt any deceptive or fraudulent pretense of unity or zeal for reform. Would it be more decent, do the organs really think, for the Democrats falsely to pretend to believe what they do not believe? Would it be more creditable for the party to imitate some of its journals, in having no principles except a desire for success and the spoils? Would the country be as likely to trust a party which was thus consciously and intentionally living a lie?—N. Y. Tribune.

MARES' NESTS.

Trying to Find Evidence to Impeach Republican Integrity.

The anxiety of the new Democratic officials at Washington to find something on which to impeach the integrity of the Republicans would be ludicrous if the motive was not so despicable. For years the Democrats professed a burning desire to get into office, not for the salaries, the honors and the power, but for the purpose of examining the books. The books have been examined, but found to furnish very little political capital for the examiners. Treasurer Jordan very ostentatiously proceeded to count the money in the Treasury, and made a great deal of noise about it until the final footings showed that not a penny was missing, when nothing more was said on the subject.

At the present time the whole Democratic and Mugwump chorus are holding their noses over a supposed discovery of rottenness in the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims. That court, it is alleged, has too many men in its employ, and First Comptroller Durham has industriously gone over its accounts, disallowing items at discretion. Among the charges rejected are salaries for an insurance expert and three assistants, amounting in all to $4,200. The court has had claims brought before it to the amount of $28,000,000 and their adjudication involved the most complicated and difficult questions of insurance that can be raised. It [illegible] surance experts this court did; yet Comptroller Durham holds that they are an unnecessary extravagance and refuses to allow them the pay they have earned.

The life of this court is a short one, having been created in 1883 to dispose of the undistributed portion of the Alabama award, and its time expires on December 31 next. Work has been done by it under high pressure. It has accomplished much, but much yet remains to be done in order to complete its task. Comptroller Durham apparently gauges its necessities by the requirements of a county squire's office in Kentucky. Ex-Postmaster-General Cresswell, who is counsel for the United States before the court, shows that its expenses are only proportional to its needs and its extraordinary labors, and that the Democratic cry of thief is as baseless and wanton in this instance as it has been in every other.

The whole outcry is due to the excess of enthusiasm with which certain small men in large places are playing the role of detective. As soon as they get on what they suppose to be a clue they immediately give the alarm, and the whole country attends while they follow up their clue, only to find a mare's nest at the other end. These gentlemen may mean well, but they are entirely too "fresh" and too plainly betray their disappointment at not finding the Government departments as administered by the Republicans the den of thieves they had always maintained and apparently believed them to be. We hope they did not judge their predecessors by their knowledge of their own weakness and will leave behind as clean a record as the Republicans when they vacate in turn in 1889.—Philadelphia Press.

MISPLACED CONFIDENCE.

SWEET ANNE.

A jewel rare are you, dear Anne,
But can you use a frying pan?
Or get a meal for a hungry man?
O, I will wed you if you can,
Sweet Anne!

Your dainty fingers wield a fan,
But can you wash a pot or pan?
Sweep, bake and brew? O, if they can
I am, in truth, the very man,
Sweet Anne!

You work in Kensington, fair Anne,
Play, sing and dance, but if you can
Welt (mend) my pants, none other than Myself can worship like this man,
Sweet Anne!

A story paper's answer to a correspondent: "If you are devotedly in love with the young man and he is devotedly in love with you we see no reason why you should not marry him. No Hope.

"I don't suppose my work will ever be done," growled Crimsonbeak over the buck and saw, as he stopped for a breathing spell.

"Not in this world, John," replied his practical wife.

"Nor in the next, either," came from the overworked man.

"How so?" asked she of his choice.

"Well, I heard the minister say only last Sunday that even the angels soar in the skies."

"But I don't expect that you'll ever saw hard enough to rise that high," was the dampener Mrs. Crimsonbeak threw over her husband's feelings.—Yonkers Statesman.

This he always gave to Mrs. Grant until she had some seventy or eighty of them. Ward heard of this and got hold of them. —I had from the venerable Joseph Gales, editor of the National Intelligencer, an interesting description of the first Senate. Some of the Senators had served in the war of the Revolution, and others had aided in framing the constitution, which they regarded as the magna charta of their young republic. Spectators were not admitted, and there was no stenographers to publish reports of what transpired, but the debates produced useful fruit on account of the weight attached to the opinions of the Senators. The States then sent their foremost men to the Senate, and no one purchased, directly or indirectly, a seat in that body.—Ben Perley Poore.

—The Apaches have smoke signals by day and fire beacons at night, and systems of telegraphy understood only by themselves. The displacement and overturning of a stone on a trail, or a bent or broken twig, is a note of warning, like a bugle call to disciplined troops. DR. TALMAGE.

A Recent Sermon Preached at Belfast, Ireland.

Seeking the Lost—The Salvation Through the Blood of Christ That is Offered to All—The Joys of Believing.

Rev. T. De Witt Talmage, D. D., of Brooklyn, N. Y., preached on a recent Sunday in St. Enoch's Church, Belfast, Ireland, and in order to gratify the wishes of the immense concourse of those who had been unable to gain admission to the church he repeated the sermon out of doors. It is estimated that at the two sermons he addressed not less than forty thousand persons. He took for his text the following:

The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost.—Luke, xix., 10.

The reverend gentleman spoke as follows:

When Kossuth visited the United States over thirty years ago, so great was the enthusiasm for Hungary that I remember very well the trees around the New York Battery were crowded with people who had climbed there to see the distinguished stranger as he passed. I shall never forget that scene. Indeed, if one be well poised he can not stand in a better place to see a passing crowd than in a tree-top. Well, Christ was coming to Jericho, and there was a small man, whose head did not come up to the shoulders of other people, who despaired of seeing the distinguished stranger while standing on the dead level, so he climbs up into a sycamore tree—broad-branched, stretching its arms clear across the highway and sits there while Jesus advances. Christ, coming up with a great multitude, casts His eye up and sees this man on the branch of the sycamore, and says: "Come down;" and after the man has alighted He says, among other things, to him: "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." Our sympathies are always aroused when we see anything that is lost. Even a dog that has wandered away from its master we feel sorry for. Of a bird that has escaped from its owner, we say: "Poor thing!" Going down the street near nightfall, in the teeth of the sharp northeast wind, you feel very pitiful for one who has got to be out to-night. As you go along you hear the affrighted cry of a child. You stop. You say: "What is the matter?" You go up and find that a little one has lost its way from home. In its excitement it can not even tell its name or its residence. The group of people gathered around are all touched, all sympathetic and helpful. A plain body comes up, and with her plaid she wraps the child, and says: "I'll take care of the poor bairn." While in the same street, but a little way on, the crier goes through the city, ringing a bell, and uttering in a voice that sounds dolefully through all the alleys and byways of the city: "A lost child! Three years of age; blue eyes, light hair. Lost child!" Did you ever hear any such pathos as that ringing through the darkness?

You are on shipboard. You see against the sky a vessel. It comes nearer. You hoist a flag. It makes no response. You say: "What is the matter with that vessel?" You put the sea-glass to your eye, and you find there is no one in the rigging—no one on the deck. "Ah," you say, "I guess that must be an abandoned ship." It comes on, falling over into the trough of the ocean. It floats every whither, tossed by the wild sea, and the crew say to the passengers, and the Captain says to his Mate: "It is a lost ship."

You are going down the street, and you see a man that you know very well. You once associated with him. You are astonished as you see him. "Why," you say, "he is all covered with the marks of sin. He must be in the very last stages of wickedness." And then you think of his blasted home, and say: "God pity his wife and child! God pity him!" A lost man.

But, my friends, we are lost. "All we, like sheep, have gone astray;" and the bellmen of Heaven come out hunting up and down to find those who have missed their way, ringing through all the streets of the city, and all the valleys and mountains of the earth, the old Gospel-bells: "The Son of Man has come to seek and to save that which was lost."

I am glad that it is the Son of Man who has come to seek us. It is not one armed with thunderbolts, riding down the sky in ponderous chariot to crush us, but the Son of Man; His nature just like our nature, with one exception; His infancy rocked in the cradle of a mother's arms; His boyhood spent in Nazareth amid a boy's temptations. Afterward, with blistered hands learning a trade. Afterward preaching, not with priest's gown, but in citizen's apparel; talking as brother talks with brother. O He was the Son of Man! He walked like a man, He slept like a man, He ate like a man, He drank like a man, He wept like a man, He suffered like a man—He was a man! He knew what sin and temptation are by personal contact, for He lived in a most abandoned village, and He moved around amid fishing villages known in all ages for their vice; and in after years He [illegible] in Jerusalem, a city which, though it had a temple, was worse than New York. And when Christ comes now He comes not to a new world to make a discovery, but He comes to an old world where He once lived; to a race whose nerves, and muscles, and bones, and flesh were just like those which He inhabited. Like us, the cold chilled Him; like us, fire warmed Him; like us, betrayal exasperated him. I warrant you that in that hostile and rough society He received many a kick and bruise, and cuff that have never been recorded. I am glad to know that He comes in the fresh memory of His sorrows on earth, and of those thrilling night scenes and day scenes of His earthly citizenship, "to seek and to save that which was lost."

In the first place, I remark that we are lost to holiness. Are you not all willing to take the Bible announcements that our nature is utterly ruined? Sin has broken in at every part of our castle. One would think that we got enough of it from our parents, whether they were pious or not; but we have taken the capital of sin with which our fathers and mothers started us, and we have by accumulation, as by infernal compound interest, made it enough to swamp us forever. The heart a battle-ground, across which armed battalions sweep right and left. The ivory palace of the soul polluted with the filthy feet of all uncleanliness. The Lord Jesus Christ comes to bring us back to holiness. He comes not to destroy us, but to take the consequences of our guilt. He breaks through lacerating thorns, and He dies to offer us cleanliness. Here is a man who a few weeks ago said: "All is right with me. I am not willing to confess I am a sinner." Now, the spirit comes to his soul, and he feels himself to be so great a sinner that there is no mercy for him. When did he make the most accurate estimate? Now. "The heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked." But, says some one in the audience, "I have sinned so much I do not believe Christ will take me." A great commander thought of going over into Italy. His friends laughed at him and said: "You can never get over the Alps. If you know anything about the Alps, you know you can never get over there." The commander waved his hand, and said, "There shall be no Alps." Then the road was built through the Simplon Pass, the wonder of following ages. We stand and see the mountain of our guilt. The obstacles seem so great that it is impossible for us to find a way into the peace and life of the Gospel; but Christ comes, and He waves His wounded hand, and cries: "There shall be no obstacles. I will come over the mountain of thy sin and the hills of thine iniquity." O ye who have sinned, instead of flying away from Christ, if you only knew who it is that comes to save you, you would fly no farther, but turn around, and while Christ seeks you you would seek Christ, and this house would be a scene of a penitent sinner and a pardoning Saviour, throwing each other's arms around each other's necks; while Heaven could afford to stop half an hour and hang over the battlements gazing. What is that flutter among the angels? Who is that horseman rushing through the city with quick dispatch? What is that announcement on the bulletins of Heaven? I know what it is. Christ has found that which was lost.

"Nor angels can their joy contain,
But kindle with new fire;
The sinner lost is found, they sing,
And strike the sounding lyre."

I remark again, we are lost to happiness, and Christ comes to find us. A caliph said: "I have been fifty years a caliph, and I have had all honors and all wealth, and yet, in the fifty years I can count up only fourteen days of happiness." How many there are in this audience that can not count fourteen days in all their life in which they had no vexations or annoyances. We all feel a capacity for happiness that has never been tested. There are interludes of bliss, but whose entire life has been a continuous satisfaction? Why is it that the most of the fine poems of the world are somehow descriptive of grief? It is because men know more about sorrow than they do about joy. John Milton succeeds when he writes "Paradise Lost," but fails when he comes to write "Paradise Regained." Dante's "Inferno" is a chime of horrors. Bryant's "Thanatopsis" is a poem of tears. Take the pathos out of the writings of Tennyson and Longfellow, and you have taken three-fourths their power. John Ruskin writes his most effective passages about the ruin of Venice. It is because men know more about sorrow than about joy that they are more effective in describing the former. The dog of bad news runs faster than the carrier pigeon flies with good tidings. There are flushes of satisfaction in the heart; but whose life has been a prolonged delight? The soul has four ranks of keys, and the world does not know how to play on such an elaborate instrument; but religion comes, and with her right hand she touches the higher keys of the soul, and then sweeps them with the symphonies of Heaven. Christ comes to find those who have been lost to happiness. He soothes them. He inspirits them. He lifts them. He opens the door of the lost Eden, and invites them to come in again to peace.

Oh, how many in this house have been goaded, and stung, and plagued! Had it not been for risking your eternal interests, some of you would have put an end to the scene of earthly suffering with your own hand. A deep undertone of sadness rolls through the soul. You would be willing now to give up your money and your social position and all you have achieved for one day of the peace which the good old slave expressed when he said, with broken language: "In owning Christ I seem to own everything. The air is mine, for I can breathe it; the sunshine is mine, for I can sit in it; the earth is mine, for I can lie down in it." To have something of the complete satisfaction which belongs to the humblest of God's children, you would give almost anything. Oh, ye who are struck through with unrest, Christ comes to-night to give you rest. If Christ comes to you, you will be independent of all worldly circumstances. So in the hour of suffering and martyrdom was Rose Allen. When the persecutor put a candle underneath her wrist, and held it there until the sinews snapped, she said: "If you see fit you can burn my feet next, and then also my head." Christ once having taken you into His custody and guardianship, you can laugh at pain, and persecution, and trial. Great peace for all those whom Christ has found, and you have found Christ. Jesus comes into their sick room. The nurse may have fallen asleep in the latter watches of the night, but Jesus watches with slumberless eyes, and He puts His gentle hand over the hot brow of the patient, and says: "You will not always be sick. I will not leave you. There is a land where the inhabitants never saith, 'I am sick.' Hush troubled soul! Peace!"

This Jesus comes into the house of bereavement, and He says: "I took your lost darling. I come now to make up for his absence. I wanted him at the gate when you came through. The days of your separation will only add to the joys of reunion. Peace. 'I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth in Me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.'"

Just as sometimes a child is so sick that it can not lie any longer in the cradle, and the mother has to take it up, so sometimes the Lord's children are so troubled that they can not lie easy anywhere but in God's lap, while He bends over them and sings this sweet song: "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you."

"The soul that on Jesus hath leaned for repose,
I will not, I will not, desert to his foes;
That soul, though all hell should endeavor to shake,
I'll never, no never, no never, forsake."

Again, I remark that we are lost to Heaven, and Christ comes to take us there. I can not imagine anything more distressful than, without having musical taste, to sit and listen to an oratorio for two hours and a half. Though it be the best of oratorios, if a man have no musical taste it is distress to him, while it is joy to others. And I can not imagine any thing more distressful for a man who has no love for pictures than to be shut up in the Luxembourg gallery in Paris. Yes, I can think of one thing worse than that, and that will be for a man to enter Heaven without any taste for it. I sometimes hear people talk as though all a man had to do was just to leave this world and go into Heaven and sit down to its enjoyments. If a man can not stand Christian society here for one day, how would he stand a million ages of it? I see an unregenerate soul entering Heaven. It enters Heaven, looks around, and sees God there, and angels there, and hears the cry: "Holy, holy;" and the unregenerate soul says: "This is no place for me," and he flies to the battlements, and he cries: "I can stand it here no longer," and he leaps off into outer darkness. In other words, the worst hell for a man would be Heaven, if he has no qualifications, no preparations, for it. But Christ comes to take the discord out of our soul and string it with a Heavenly attuning. He comes to take out that from us which makes us unfit for Heaven, and substitute that which assimilates us. Ten thousand times the gate of Heaven has swung back and forth but it never swings back and forth save as Christ opens it, and you will go in through Him or not at all. Christ wants you there. How do I know it? Suppose a man lost a diamond, and he looked for it eight or ten days, would you not conclude from the fact that he looked for it so long that he wanted the diamond? And when I find Christ seeking for your soul, seeking for it ever since it has been a soul, seeking for it by day and by night, seeking for it through heat and through cold, seeking for it with tears in His eyes and blood upon His brow and scourges on His back and a world of agony in His heart, I know that it is because He wants to find you. Oh, He has prepared a glorious Heaven for you! It is all ready. Not merely a throne, but steps by which to mount it. Not only a harp, but a song to play on it; not only a banner procession, but a victory which it is to celebrate. God wants no vacant chairs at that banquet. He does not want those who stand around Him in glory to wonder why you have not been enlisted. He does not want the book of life to thunder shut till your name is in it. What do I breathe? It is the fragrance of Him whose garments smell of myrrh, and aloes, and cassia, out of the ivory palaces. What do I hear? It is the footstep of Him who comes with worn sandal in the journey from Bethlehem to Nazareth, and from Nazareth to Jerusalem, and from Jerusalem to Golgotha, and from Golgotha to glory, and from glory here, seeking that which is lost. Oh, jostle Him not from thy door-step. Do not drive this Christ away, as though He were an unworthy beggar soliciting your alms. Hear His voice. Trust His sacrifices. Respond to His love. Take His Heaven. Do you not know, O man! O woman! that you are the lost one spoken of in my text? "The Son of Man is come to seek and to save that which was lost." You may hide away from Him, but there are some things which will find you, whether Christ by His grace finds you or not. Trouble will find you. Temptation will find you. Sickness will find you. Death will find you. Judgment will find you. Eternity will find you.

Soon you will be gone from all these scenes, and if a thousand men should come out with lanterns, and torches, and St. Bernard dogs used to hunting up missing travelers, and search for your soul you could not be found by them. The grave will have your body. Your heirs will have your estate. Eternity will have your soul. In the flash of a second your last opportunity for Heaven may go out. Postpone this question of the soul and you are postponing getting into the last life-boat that shall put out from the wreck for the beach ere the hulk lurch over and go down. God forbid that any of you should at the last have the dismay of the woman of whom I was reading. One night she could not sleep because of her soul's wandering from Christ. She got up and wrote in her diary: "One year from now I will attend to the matters of my soul." She retired, but she could not sleep. So she arose again and wrote a better promise in her diary: "One month from now I will attend to the matters of my soul." She retired again but found no sleep, and arose again and wrote: "Next week I will attend to the matters of my soul." Then she slept soundly. The next day she went into scenes of gayety. The following day she was sick, and the middle of next week she died. Delirium lifted from her mind just long enough for her to say: "I am a week too late; I am lost." Oh, to be a year too late, or a month too late, or an hour too late—aye, to be a second too late, is to be forever too late.

FINALLY DISCOVERED.

What It Was That Made a Whole Pennsylvania Mining Village Sick.

[Shenandoah (Pa.) Special.]

The danger of miners is not always confined to the dark and gloomy interior of a coal mine, where they are constantly confronted with the treacherous top roof and the possibility of an inexperienced companion igniting the deadly damp. A strange case of black-damp and its effects has just come to light at Dean's Patch, situated on the outskirts of this place, the particulars of which are as follows: Tuesday last the inhabitants of the patch, which is made up exclusively of miners and their families, were visited by a peculiar smell, similar to that of black-damp experienced in the mines, accompanied by a foul and sickening stench. It produced a stupor among many of the people, especially the children and the female portion. Its effects were of short duration, and apparently of no serious nature. The strange visitation was therefore almost overlooked, when the canine population, chickens, etc., began to die without showing any previous signs of illness. The water in this section being not of the best quality, their death was by some attributed to that cause. Wednesday night, however, the entire neighborhood of fifty or seventy-five families complained and appeared restless. Later on during the night a whole family was overcome and only escaped death from suffocation by the father, who was awakened by the strange smell, and who, from long experience in the mines, understood the situation and lost no time in arousing his wife and three children from their lethargy and with the assistance of his neighbors soon removed them to a place of safety, where they were restored to consciousness. It transpired subsequently that many other families were affected in a similar way, but recovered. The whole population was now aroused, and the miners began to search where the deadly black-damp came from, for it was that which had invaded the bed-chambers of the miners and their families. The whole mountain-side is lined with deep and dangerous mine-breaches in that locality, one of which is situated about the center of the town, over the workings of the Lehigh Valley Coal Company's No. 2 colliery, from which it was discovered the poisonous gas was rapidly issuing like a volcano. The breach is about one thousand feet deep, seventy-five feet wide, and has been used for some years as a burial place for dead dogs, cats, etc., producing the sickening smell which accompanied the gas. The origin of the damp is a mystery, as expert engineers and miners are on the ground and claim fire does not exist, but that the seat of the trouble is in the lower lift one thousand five hundred feet from the surface, around which a water-proof battery of brick is now being built to drown out that portion of the mine. Many of the families have moved away, and others will be forced to vacate unless the experiment now under way proves successful. The colliery is a profitable one, shipping two hundred cars daily and employs three hundred men and boys.

A Deer Chase with Lots of Fun.

[Macon (Ga.) Telegraph and Messenger.]

Last Friday, while Mrs. James Pritchard and her colored servant, Julia, and Master Bullnot Pritchard were out in a small skiff boat fishing for mullet, near Titusville, they saw a young deer run from the hummock into the river. They succeeded in getting before it and the shore, continuing to force it out into deeper water. With Mrs. Pritchard at the oars and Julia poling their plan was working admirably, but Julia failing to tell Mrs. Pritchard which direction to change to, the animal dodged them and made for the shore. Bullnot was seen on the shore and tried to head it off and drive it back into the deep water again, but the deer was too active and made a bounding leap just in front of him, when it entered the hummock again.

HOME AND FARM.

—Dry earth is one of the best absorbents of manures.

—White spots upon varnished furniture will disappear if you hold a hot plate from the stove over them.—Cleveland Leader.

—Cookies: One cup sugar, one-half cup butter, one-half cup sweet milk, one-half teaspoon soda dissolved in the milk, flour to roll well. Cut in squares quite thin. Brisk oven.—The Household.

—In pruning cut the wood off close to the base, in order to leave no stabs. This is especially needful with the sprouts that grow up from the limbs in the middle of the tree.—Chicago Times.

—Codfish, Cuban Style: One small dry fish cut in pieces. Fry one onion, cut fine in a spoonful lard, when brown add half can tomatoes. Put in the fish with water enough to cover it. Cook about an hour; serve on toast.—Philadelphia Call.

—Cornmeal croquettes are nice for lunch or breakfast. Mix two ounces of cornmeal, two ounces of wheat flour, two ounces of butter and four ounces of granulated sugar to a paste, adding a little grated lemon peel. Roll out thin, cut in forms and bake. Serve with powdered sugar.—Boston Journal.

—Cold roast beef may be utilized in this way: Cut the beef in small pieces and put it in a stew-pan with a good-sized piece of butter, some finely-minced onion, a little water, with salt and curry powder to taste. Simmer for fifteen minutes, and serve hot with a ring of boiled rice surrounding it.—N. Y. Times.

—The poisonous properties of stockings dyed with the brilliant aniline dyes, it is said, may be rendered harmless by dipping the articles in a bath of rubber dissolved in naphtha or some other reagent. This having been done, subsequent evaporation has the effect to cover each fiber with a thin film of rubber, and by this means the transfer of the coloring material from the goods to the skin is prevented.—N. Y. Sun.

—Kerosene oil is attracting much attention as an insecticide. It is a deadly poison to nearly all insects, while it is harmless to man. As it does not mix with water, an emulsion should be made with milk. An emulsion composed of one-third oil and two-thirds milk, either sweet or sour, is found to be more serviceable. The emulsion may be applied in the same manner as Paris green.—Philadelphia Press.

—Pickled Peaches or Pears: Take one gallon of vinegar and three pounds of brown sugar, some cloves, allspice and mace; boil all together; boil the peaches or pears till soft, and stick half a dozen whole cloves into each; pour the boiling vinegar over the fruit and let it stand for twenty-four hours; boil and skim the vinegar for the second time; pour over the fruit, and then seal up at once in glass jars.—Chicago Journal.

—Lemon Jelly Cake: One cup of sugar, piece of butter the size of an egg, two eggs; put sugar, eggs and butter together and beat them; add one-half cup of water, two cups of flour, one tablespoonful of baking powder; this makes three layers, and are to be put together with this jelly. The juice and grated rind of one lemon, one cup of sugar, one egg, a piece of butter the size of a nutmeg; cook it over hot water, as custard, until it boils.—Boston Budget.

CUT CORN.

How It May Be Removed to Make Room for Another Crop.

It often happens that a farmer would like to use his corn field the same season for wheat or rye, or he might prefer to have the cut corn removed from the ground for the purpose of standing it in a more convenient place for husking and taking care of the stover. But if he never did such a job or if he once managed it at a disadvantage, he will be apt to think it so formidable and expensive an undertaking that he will let it go, although the field might with little more tillage do about as well for the winter grain as would the summer fallow which had received the season's tillage expressly to fit it for one of them. Nevertheless, good workmen say they can harvest the corn quite as fast by drawing it off as in the usual way. It can be cut and dropped into gavels much faster than to carry and set up each handful in shock. Moreover, experience proves that corn, if stood well packed up to a straight fence, making a heavy body of it in a continuous line, without stopping to bind it all, will stand sure and keep better than when standing in shocks in the field, and will be in better shape, both for husking and for saving the fodder, and often such corn-stubble, if the crop received good tillage, will with a little more cultivating (without plowing) be in a fair condition for a seed-bed again.

To carry out this plan most economically I would prefer to have the field only twenty-five or thirty rods wide with a straight fence along each side to stand the corn to. Have a truck wagon with long reach and strong plank-bottom to draw the corn off with, then cut three rows at a time and drop into a straight row of gavels of about the size that a stout hand can conveniently handle. Have a boy to drive, and say two men to lift the corn, place it straight and even across the platform-bottom of the wagon, butts all one way, to the side the men work from. One or two rows of these gavels will make a load in going across the field. Then drive along the fence with the corn-butts toward it when the same men take it off in snug armfuls and stand it straight and compact as possible; you can safely use three or four feet width at bottom, and a continuous row of this breadth both sides of the field will usually take all the crop. The tops will naturally lean toward the fence and all will stand so compact together there will not be the least need of any binding, and it keeps so well upright that none takes hurt, and the fodder will be less weather-beaten than in single shocks.—Henry Ives, in N. Y. Tribune.

—The Denver Chamber of Commerce publish an official contradiction of the report that Denver is suffering from stagnation of business and is declining in importance. The census of the year shows the population to have increased sixty per cent. since 1880. Two hundred and fifty building permits have been issued; few houses are vacant than usual; the smelting works have enlarged their plants; the banks show larger deposits and greater cash resources than ever before and Denver is steadily improving.

A Wonderful Offer.

Every Farmer and Stock-breeder should send One Dollar to the Rural Home Co., of Rochester, N. Y., for a year's subscription to THE AMERICAN RURAL HOME, and receive Free a copy of The Farmers' and Stockbreeders' Guide, a new and reliable work just issued. The book contains over four hundred pages, is printed on fine paper, fully illustrated and bound in cloth. It is by no means a cheap-John affair, but a valuable compilation of the writings of Youatt, Mills, Skinner and Clater, and is the most reliable and comprehensive work ever issued on the subject. The diseases of oxen, sheep, swine and horses, with the causes, symptoms and treatment are given with such simple directions that every farmer may become his own cattle doctor. It treats of the anatomy of all domestic animals and practically deals with the use of Oxen, Breed of Sheep and Stable management. Any one after consulting its pages can select a carriage, wagon or saddle horse and be a good judge of cattle. It is invaluable to every one who has to do with the Farm or Stable and will give hundreds of dollars to its fortunate possessor. As to THE AMERICAN RURAL HOME, it is generally considered to be the best paper of its class published. We are acquainted with the publishers and proprietors and can vouch for the genuineness of their offer. Paper, one year, with book postpaid, One Dollar. Send for sample copy with list of more than one hundred bound books which are given away. Address Rural Home Co., limited, Rochester, N. Y.

Tall Shop Girls Preferred.

"Tall saleswomen wanted." So reads a small placard in the window of one of the largest Tremont street dry goods stores.

"Why is height an essential?" the proprietor was asked.

"Because," he replied, with a smile, "I think that tall saleswomen give more character to a store. Then, too, I have an idea that ladies, as a class, prefer to trade with tall girls."

"Have you no other reason for desiring tall girls?"

"None, whatever, for all our heavy work, as handling rolls of cloth, etc., is done by men and we only give the girls such work as requires but little physical exertion."—Boston Globe.

"How's Your Liver?"

In the comic opera of "The Mikado" his imperial highness says:

"To make, to some extent,

A nobler task than making evil livers, rivers of harmless merriment no person king or layman, could take upon himself. The liver among the ancients was considered the source of all of man's evil impulses, and the chances are ten to one to-day that if one's liver is in an ugly condition of discontent, someone's head will be mashed before night!

"How's your liver?" is equivalent to the inquiry: Are you a bear or an angel to-day?

Nine-tenths of the "pure-cussedness," the actions for divorce, the curtain lectures, the family rows, not to speak of murders, crimes and other calamities are prompted by the irritating effect of the inactivity of the liver upon the brain. Fothergill, the great specialist, says this, and he knows. He also knows that to prevent such catastrophies nothing equals Warner's safe cure renowned throughout the world, as a maker of

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES. The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine, after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other. DR. Before I had used five bottles, I was well and at work as hard as any man could, for over three weeks; but I worked too hard for my strength, and taking a hard cold, I was taken with the most acute and painful rheumatism all through my system that ever was known. The excitement in Spain over the occupation of one of the Caroline islands by German forces has quieted down in the face of the evident conciliatory policy of King Alfonso and his Ministry. The hoisting of the German flag on the isle is explained and the arbitration of the whole question offered by Prince Bismarck.

New York Tribune: The Administration raids on the shipyards and steamship companies prove that this business of reform is an excellent thing—from the English point of view. No ratification meetings have been held in the Clyde shipyards or in Liverpool, but unquestionably the present Administration is very popular there.

Prince Bismarck, having taken the free trade school at its word, gave the system a fair trial in Germany, and was not only disappointed but alarmed by the results. He became a Protectionist in 1879 and has seen no reason to regret his change of economic faith. The new system has revived manufacturing and mining industries, checked emigration, provided employment for the surplus population, and imparted a new spirit of activity to the Fatherland. He now assures Count Kalnoky that Protection is the only thing that will save German industries, and has urged him to adopt similar tariff schedules in Austria.

While the people of Michigan were complaining last winter over so much snow and severe cold weather, Dame Nature was busy at work getting things prepared to astonish the native with a big yield of wheat. That she made no mistake is fully proven by the many good yields reported by threshers, who are now the busiest men in the common wealth. The average yield throughout the State is estimated by the agricultural department at 21 bushels, which will probably place Michigan at the head of all the States of the Union on average yield, with a total product of about 26,500,000 bushels. If the reports in our exchanges should be taken as a basis the average yield in the State would exceed 20 bushels per acre.—Lansing Republican.

If the telegraphic dispatches are true—and there is no reason to doubt them—Gen. Schofield, being called upon by Gov. Warren, the anti-Chinese riots, promptly ordered troops to be got in readiness to move, and telegraphed to President Cleveland for orders, as the law does not permit United States troops to be used to suppress a local disorder except upon an order from the president. The president was not in Washington, but was off "junketting," as the Democrats used to call it; the secretary of war was not in Washington; the secretary of the navy was not in Washington; the secretary of the interior was not in Washington; the postmaster-general was not in Washington; the attorney general was not in Washington—the whole administration was "junketting" all over the country. No answer was received to Gen. Schofield's dispatch. Meanwhile the nation was disgraced by the most savage and awful anti-Chinese riot ever known. Unhappy wretches were roasted alive in the conflagration of their shanties; others were shot down, and left to be eaten by hogs; others were brutally pounded to death. Republican officials have taken summer vacations from Washington in the past; but they never did so to the neglect of their public duties, and they never were out of reach of communication with their subordinates. The "reform" administration has a great field open for reform: namely, its own practices.

The Caroline Islands about which Spain and Germany have lately been contending, are sometimes called the New Philippines. They are situated between the Philippines proper, the Ladrones, the Marshall islands and Papua. Their exact geographical position is between latitude 3 and 12 north, and longitude 133 and 155 east. The total area is estimated at 1,000 square miles; population about 25,000. They are divided into numerous groups, the western most of which, called the Pelew, consists of seven larger and many small islands—all of distinctly coraline formation. They are mostly flat, and offer no secure harbor or even anchorage for vessels. Northeast of Pelew is the group of Yap, the principal member of which is mountainous, and said to be rich in precious metals. East of Yap are the Egoi, which resemble Yap in surface and geological character. The soil is comparatively fertile, and they are partially inhabited. Other groups are the Swede, the Lutke and the Senavin islands. The island lying farther east, called Ualan, is twenty-four miles in circumference, and is well supplied with water, fruit and fish. The climate is mild and healthful; the inhabitants, mostly Malays are generally fishermen, and make good sailors with a little civilized training. The Carolines belong to Spain, by right of discovery as long ago as 1543, when they were found by the Spanish navigator Lopez de Villalobos, and named by him. What the basis of the German claim is has not been publicly proclaimed, but probably Germany has thought to make them of some desirable use in a commercial way, as they were scarcely occupied at all by Spain, imagined that possession could be taken without protest. They are not of much value to any country, except to Spain as a relic of departed glories.

Grains of Truth.

The clever turn everything to account.

Though we travel the world over to find the beautiful, we must carry it with us, or we find it not.

The world deals good-naturedly with good-natured people, and I never knew a sulky misanthropist who quarreled with it, but it was he, and not it, that was in the wrong.

If, in instructing a child, you are vexed with it for want of adroitness, try, if you have never tried before, to write with your left hand, and then remember that a child is all left hand.

The difficulties of education lie deeper down than the curriculum. It is not so much finding out to teach what is needful; the all-important thing is how to develop the mental and moral energies.

Bring up your children to joy. Give them just as much as they can take without intoxication and without reaction. If you take too much of any one essential, you cheat some other. Equipoise of the various elements of our being is what we want.

Enthusiasm is the glow of the soul; enthusiasm is the lever by which men are raised above the average level and enterprise, and become capable of a goodness and benevolence which, but for it, would be quite impossible.

Nothing so establishes the mind amid the rollings and turbulency of present things as both a look above them and a look beyond them—above them to the steady and good Hand by which they are ruled, and beyond them to the sweet and beautiful end to which by that Hand they shall be brought.

The man of talents possesses them like so many tools, does his job with them, and there an end; but the man of genius is possessed by it, and it makes him into a book or a life, according to its whim. Talent takes the existing moulds, and makes its castings, better or worse, of richer or baser metal, according to knack or opportunity; but genius is always shaping new ones, and runs the man in them, so that there is always that human feel in its results which gives us a kindred thrill.

Mental burdens will be far more easily borne if they are placed, as far as practicable, out of sight. When we gaze upon them, they increase in size. When in our thoughts we emphasize and dwell upon them, they sometimes grow almost unbearable. It is well enough to face trouble when it comes to us, to measure it and know its weight, that we may summon up courage and strength sufficient to endure it; but this done, let us place it where it may no longer be in constant sight—let us carry it manfully and bravely, but not drag it to the fight, to dwell upon its weight, and to claim sympathy for being obliged to bear it. When the emphasis of life is laid on the cheerful and attractive side, its real burdens will be borne lightly, happiness will abound and be diffused, and the value of life be multiplied tenfold.

Whipping out the Witches.

J. J. Shier, editor of the Port Jervis (N. Y.) Gazette, while walking through Sullivan county a few days ago, on a collecting tour, stopped at a cabin in the mountains back of Pond Eddy to rest himself. The wife of the proprietor was in the cabin churning. While watching this woman at her work Mr. Shier was surprized to see her stop, look into the churn in a perplexed manner, and then seize a bundle of switches, with which she began to switch the churn smartly, walking around it as she whipped.

"'Tain't the churn I'm lickin'," said she, in reply to the editor's inquiries. "I hain't got nothin' gin the churn. It's the witches in it that I'm slatherin' an' tryin' to make git out'n here. This h'yer churn's bewitched, an' has been fur better'n a mouth an' I can't make butter enough come to grease a three-inch corn cake. These is hazel switches I'm a usin', but they don't seem to get the charm up ez they orter. Hazel switches orter drive the peskiest kind of a witch away at the fust two or three whacks, but they's sumpin' wrong with these uns. If I only had my lucky quarter back I'd soon hustle 'em out.

"What do you mean by that?" asked the Port Jervis editor.

"W'at do I mean?" replied the old dame. "My lucky quarter o' course; that's w'at I mean. I had a silver quarter wunst, an' I usety put that in the churn ev'ry time I used it, an' them 'ere witches laid low 'until then. I can tell ye. But some one stole that quarter 'bout a month ago, an' these witches has had the upper hand over me ever since. This is wearin' work on an ol' woman like me. I only wish I could git my quarter back. Or else I wish I had another one."

The editor from Port Jervis produced a quarter, which the old woman dropped in the churn, walked backward around it three times and then seized the dasher and went vigorously to work. After a few brisk strokes she said:

"Thar, sir. They've gone! They couldn't stand the silver. I'll have this butter ready to work now in less than a jiffy. I'm much obleeged."

James Juniper Shier did not wait for the butter to come but resume his journey.

"So she caught you, did she?" said a friend at Pond Eddy to whom he told the story. "If you had gone back and peeked through a window you would have seen the innocent old lady fishing that quarter out of the churn and depositing it in an old coffee pot in the cupboard. They say she's got it more than half full of lucky quarter's that confiding victims have given her to replace the one she lost. During the hunting and fishing season she reaps a harvest, as her cabin is a handy place for the tired and hungry sportsman to ask for a little snack. Yes, this belief in witchcraft in Sullivan County is a sad thing to think about, but it pays."

When Mr. Shier got back to Port Jervis he said he didn't care so much about having been taken in, but the quarter was just half of his day's collections and he could have had more fun with it at home.—Rochester Democrat-Chronicle.

Silk-Raising in America.

The silk industry, which has become so large an interest in this country, is purely a manufacturing one, getting its raw material altogether from abroad, duty free. The manufacturers do not expect much result from silk-raising in America, chiefly because they think silk cannot be well reeled in this country at any satisfactory price. A demand for protective duties on the raw material would also tend to reduce the margins for manufacturers, should silk-growing become an interest of importance. It is stated that the girls in the French filatures earn only from one to one and a half francs (twenty to thirty cents) a day, and in those of Italy seventy-five centimes to a franc (fifteen to twenty cents) for fourteen hours' work, while equally skilled labor here should return nearly a dollar. Moreover, silk valued at four to five dollars per pound can be brought to New York from Japan at from three to eight cents per pound freight. The promising field for American silk-growing in America seems, therefore, to be restricted chiefly to that of a subsidiary industry for women and children, who would not otherwise be at work, and then under the disadvantage of "house reeling." Whether the production of cocoons, not for reeling, but for direct use by the growing industry of spun-silk manufacture, might prove profitable, is very questionable, in view of the low price (about seventy-five cents per pound) paid for cocoons.

Nevertheless, a "Women's Silk-culture Association," one of the indirect results of the Centennial Exposition, exists in Philadelphia with the purpose of promoting silk-culture as profitable work for women. This was organized, with "purely philanthropic" purpose, by Philadelphia ladies, headed by Mrs. John Lucas, in April, 1880; it has permanent offices at 1328 Chestnut Street, where reeling is taught, silk-worm eggs, mulberry-trees and hand-reels sold, and books of instruction, which it publishes, supplied. Two silk exhibitions have been held, and the association boasts twelve auxiliaries in as many States, and has had, it states, over thirty thousand correspondents. It is hoped ultimately to open a filature. Its prospectus, in presenting the claims of "America's new industry," says: "It can be prosecuted by the feebler members of the family, women and children, or aged persons, to whom the severer country life is a burden, and the compensation is sure; for if our country is sending annually to foreign lands $15,000,000 for raw silk, there is no reason why this amount of money cannot be divided among our own American culturists. The crop or product is not perishable, like much of the farm product, and the trees, once planted and grown, yield a perpetual supply of food for the silk-worms, care being taken only in the annual picking of the leaves."

The production of 60,000 pounds of cocoons was reported by correspondents of the association in 1883, largely from southern New Jersey and from the South.—From "A Silk Dress," in Harper's Magazine for July.

Penitent.

Twenty-six years ago a young clerk in the city of New York stole a pocket dictionary from the law office in which he was employed, and, soon after, thirty-five dollars in money from other employers in the same city. He removed to China, where as it appears, he lived virtuously, and became a prosperous man. He is still a resident of Shanghai.

A few months ago he lost a prayer-book, which was returned to him by a Catholic priest, to whom the theft had been confessed. At first, indignant at the injury done him, he demanded the exposure and punishment of the thief. But the recollection of his own similar transgressions long ago came to him with such force that his anger was swallowed up in contrition, and he determined to make a similar restitution.

He wrote a letter to the New York Herald, confessing his thefts, enclosing the stolen dictionary and money, and requested the editor to forward the same to their owners, or in case they could not be found, to give the money to a charitable institution.

The proprietor of the book had been dead for many years, but the rightful owner of the money, once a prosperous New York merchant is now a tobacco-planter in North Carolina, and so poor that the stolen money is really an important addition to his year's revenue. It has been sent to him.

A remarkable circumstance is, that the contrite man gave to the Herald his full name and address, and in mentioning his crime, he did not call it by any fine name, or attempt any excuse. He says in plain English that he "stole" the book and "pilfered" the money. He is a wise man. He has won back a portion of a lost treasure, most precious, his self-respect! More than this, while it was not necessary that he should have given his name to the public, he has made such restitution as lay in his power for the wrong he had done.

A Doctor's Hint to Working-Men.

When you have heavy work to do, do not take either beer, cider, or spirits. By far the best drink is thin oat meal and water, with a little sugar. The proportions are a quarter of a pound of oat meal to two or three quarts of water, according to the heat of the day and your work and thirst; it should be well boiled, and then an ounce or an ounce and a half of brown sugar added. If you find it thicker than you like, add three quarts of water. Before you drink it, shake up the oatmeal well through the liquid. In summer drink this cold; in winter hot. You will find it not only quenches thirst, but will give you more strength and endurance than any other drink. If you cannot boil it, you can take a little oatmeal mixed with cold water and sugar, but this is not so good; always boil it if you can. If at any time you have to make a very long day, as in harvest, and cannot stop for meals, increase the oatmeal to half a pound, or even three-quarters, and the water to three quarts if you are likely to be very thirsty. For quenching thirst, few things are better than weak coffee and a little sugar. One ounce of coffee and half an ounce of sugar boiled in two quarts of water and cooled is a very thirst-quenching drink. Cold tea has the same effect, but neither is so supporting as oat meal.

A correspondent writes that the Afghans eat onions as the Americans do apples. Our readers will therefore at once understand the cause of the recent attack by the Russians. They were obliged to use their guns to keep the Afghans from coming within hailing distance. And now we can easily believe Col. Marvin's statement that the inhabitants of Afghanistan are a strong race and long-winded. They never get out of breath.—New York Tribune.

Congressmen and Gentlemen.

A good and perhaps true story is told of Bob Ingersoll and Secretary Lamar. Bob called at the Interior Department and asked to see the Secretary.

"De Sec'tary is occupied, sah, with members and Senatahs only. Won't see nobody else now, sah," said the colored messenger at the door.

Bob waited a moment, with his hands in his pockets. Then he pulled out half a dollar and dropped it into the janitor's hand, after giving a few whispered instructions. A moment later the messenger walked into the Secretary's room, where a large number of Senators were assembled, and addressed the Secretary.

"Mr. Sec'tary, Mr. Bob Ingersoll am at de doah. He says he understands that dis am de time when you won't see any but members and Senatahs, an' he wants to know when you receive gentlemen."

"Show the Colonel in," said the Secretary.—Washington Star.

This is from F. Marion Crawford's new novel, "An American Politician:" "Boston is quite too funny about driving, too. A lady may go out with a man in a sleigh, but you couldn't possibly go with him on wheels—on the same road, at the same hour, same man same everything, except the wheels. You agree to go out next week in a sleigh with Mr. Vancouver. If it has happened to thaw, and there is no snow, and he comes in a buggy, you couldn't possibly go with him, because it would be quite improper."—Long Island Times.

VISITORS to the tomb of General Grant make all sorts of excuses to speak with the soldiers on guard. The camp is a great object of curiosity, and the persistence of the sight-seers is a heavy tax on the good nature of Uncle Sam's artillerymen.

DAN RICE, the old circus clown, has set up a claim to the whole island on which stands the city of Galveston, Tex. Mr. Rice has in his possession an old Mexican land grant obtained from Daniel McLaren, an original Spanish settler, which, he says, covers the claim.

THERE are seven thousand wells in St. Louis, about seven-eighths of which the Board of Trade has closed as absolutely poisonous. Now a "Well-Owners' Protective Association" has been formed, and they are trying to have them reopened. "All's well that ends well."

A FREIGHT train stopped at a five-acre melon field on the Bergen County short-cut of the Erie Road near Garfield, N. J., the other day, and the men helped themselves to the fruit. The grower took the number of the engine and reported it, and the next day every employe on that train was dismissed.

IN Sioux County, Neb., there are 78,670 acres of the public domain fenced by the cattle companies; in Custer County 125,000 acres, and in Lincoln County 2,919 acres, of which the General Land Office has information. According to the late order of the President, the fences inclosing these lands must be removed.

THE Boston Young Men's Christian Union during the past summer provided carriage rides for invalids. The inmates of all the charitable institutions have been benefited, and through the efforts of the Associated Charities a number of others have also been given rides. In these drives 314 carriages were sent at an expense of $905.75.

THE South American Commission appointed by President Arthur is preparing its final report, which will be submitted to Congress at the beginning of the next session. Since its creation the Commission has traveled 3,200 miles and officially visited nine countries. The report will fill two thousand or three thousand closely printed pages.

HERE is the long story of the September stars made short. Mercury became the morning star on the 3d, and those who wish to see the quick little dodger of the solar system must look for him an hour before sunrise. Saturn, outshining the other planets, is morning star also, and so, too, Mars and Neptune are morning stars. Uranus, Jupiter and Venus are evening stars. Venus is the gem of the Western sky.

IT is stated that the recent explosion of the steamer S. M. Felton at Philadelphia has been traced to the agency of a man named Adrianco Spears, who carried a line of accident insurance which would have yielded him $150 per week if he had been seriously injured. Spears, however, was killed, and the payment of his life policies, which call for $35,000, will be resisted. The deceased is said to have bled the accident insurance companies handsomely during the last fifteen years.

General Logan is writing a book which is to give a history of the conspiracy which led to the rebellion, and will contain some startling facts and documents.

What has become of the Democratic yell of last year about "the immense surplus in the treasury?" The National debt is not absorbing it. Does the United States Treasurer keep it for fees?

The English have just seized upon the idea that perhaps Mormonism isn't exactly as pure and shining as it might be, and Mormon missionaries have got to look out for bad eggs and hard brickbats.

The Prohibitionists may succeed in electing Hoadly Governor of Ohio, but in his Hamilton speech he gives them notice what they may expect of him. He said the traffic in intoxicating liquors is the legitimate subject of license, because the use is beneficial and only the abuse injurious.

Judge Powers, of Michigan, the new Chief Justice of Utah, is in Washington, having been called by the President to talk over Mormon matters.

Mr. Powers says that Mr. Cleveland is determined to wage as fierce a war as possible against the Mormons, and has instructed the judicial officials to carry ...

German Customs.

A correspondent of the Brooklyn Eagle, traveling in Germany, writes:

It was a warm, still, summer Sunday. It often seems as though nature was more peacefully disposed on that day than on others—when we sallied forth to scale the Appolinarisberg. This hill is crowned with a four-towered Gothic church adorned with frescoes. Some sort of religious feast day was being observed on the Appolinarisberg. Pilgrims, who ... were ascending the road in their best attire, and bowing and kneeling at the stations of the cross placed beside the way.

Flags fluttered about the terrace that the church stands on, and crowds were entering the edifice. We stepped in, glanced at the fine frescoes, heard the organ, and would have attended a little of the service if a man had not crept up to us and expressed a determination to have fees. We concluded then that the Rhine was better worthy of our attention. Fees everywhere. Oh, the curse of them! In churches, in galleries, in palaces, in museums, in railroad stations, in restaurants—fees! fees! fees! You pay them to the army and the navy, the clergy reach for them, nobility and even royalty sends its lackeys after them, guides, porters, clerks, landlords, loungers, train hands, policemen, drivers, customs officers—confound the beggars! Peasants were gossiping about the terrace, looking so picturesque and so like figures out of the grand opera in their Sunday dress that we half unconsciously put our hands in our pockets to pay for that exhibition, too, but we were not assessed.

On the contrary, they made way for us beside them on the wall that prevented visitors from rolling down the steep hill into town, and then stared at our modern clothes as curiously as we looked at their quaint, unhandsome costumes. There was a spring up there, too, and nobody on hand to collect fees from the drinkers, so the Un...

"What kind of a doctor am Dr. Black?" asked Uncle Moses of an old Austin darky. "One ob de best I eber heard tell ob. Instead ob dying in twenty-four hours he libbed thirty-six, sah."—Texas Siftings.

"Suppose," said an examiner to a student in engineering, "you had built an engine yourself, performed every part of the work without assistance, and knew that it was in complete order, but, when put on the road, the pump would not draw water. What would you do?" "I should look into the tank and ascertain if there was any water to draw," said the student.

"Father, please tell me what entails mean, and if we have such a law in the United States." Father—"Under the law of entails, my boy, the landed property of the father is handed down to the eldest son, successively, generation after generation. We have no such provision in the United States. Here the money generally goes to the lawyers who settle the fathers' estate. You see the difference?"

A good Deacon of one of our city churches meandered along one of the docks yesterday, and, noticing a crowd of boys fishing, he commenced to reprove them for breaking the Sabbath. In the middle of his harangue he stopped suddenly to ejaculate. "Look out, bub, you've got a bite," to a small boy whose attention had been distracted from his line. Human nature was too strong for him.—Saginaw (Mich.) News.

You can buy an eighty-ton gun, steel tube, with wrought-iron coils, best English make, for $90,000. This is a great deal of money to pay for one gun, but any farmer with running water, plenty of fruit, pleasant hills, and forty acres of forest on his farm and nine or ten families of relatives in New York and Philadelphia will find the outlay not only a justifiable expense, but really one of the most profitable investments he ever made.—Brooklyn Eagle.

DYNAMITERS ARRESTED.

Three Persons, Members of the Dry Goods Equality Association, Arrested for Causing the Explosion at the Store of Garry Brothers, New York City.

NEW YORK, September 14.—At two o'clock on the morning of February 1st, this year, an explosion as loud as the discharge of half a dozen cannon occurred on the corner of Grand and Allen streets. Several minutes after the explosion caused the greatest excitement in the neighborhood. Policemen were seen running in every direction, and many of the inmates of tenements, close by, believing that everything was going to pieces from the shock of an earthquake, called for help from the windows on the upper floors of their residences. The show windows of Garry Bros., corner of Grand and Allen streets, were almost entirely demolished.

Over one hundred panes of glass in Ridley's building, on the opposite side of the street, were shattered. A few minutes after the explosion the police were convinced that an attempt had been made to blow up the Garry Brothers' store with dynamite. From evidence obtained soon after the explosion, the blame was at once thrown on the Dry Goods Equality Association, which numbered over 200 members, and which held regular sessions at their headquarters in Orchard Hall. On account of trouble between the Garry Brothers and members of the Equality Association just previous to the explosion several arrests were made, but all the prisoners were discharged for want of evidence.

After months of hard detective work, Inspector Byrnes finally obtained sufficient evidence to justify him in the belief that the explosion was beyond a doubt the work of members of the association. He immediately set to work and tried to have one of his detectives elected a member of the organization, but every time his name came up before the meeting for election he was blackballed. After several weeks the detective gained the confidence of three sons of the proprietor of Orchard Hall, named Gerstein. From the boys he learned that they had frequently heard members of the ...

MICHIGAN STATE NEWS.

A Terrific Storm.

Buildings were wrecked, orchards laid waste, huge swaths made in woods and other damage done in Southwest Michigan by a recent storm. Near Ridgeway Robert McMillan was thrown from his buggy into a ditch, having several ribs broken. George Smith lost 150 head of stock, an orchard and five acres of new-sown wheat. His barns were wrecked and their contents scattered to the winds. Chickens were found hanging to trees and poles. John Kent and John Curry were picked up insensible and badly bruised. The track of the cyclone varied from thirty to sixty rods in width. At places it seemed to rise from the earth, then swoop down and destroy everything in its path. The full extent of the damage was not known, but the losses were variously estimated from $25,000 to $50,000.

A FADED ROSE.

Poor, faded rose, laid in a cold, still hand;
Dear hand, so often closely clasped in mine,
My help and comfort in a weary land,
Now cold and still, while for its touch I pine.
Farewell, dear hand! Farewell, dear heart!
What joy have I since we must part!

Close softly, poor, pale rose, like those dark eyes
Which turned so often lovingly to mine.
The sun and stars still light the distant skies,
But Death has veiled the light for which I pine.
Farewell, dear eyes! Farewell, dear heart!
The world is dark since we must part.

I kiss thee, faded but still fragrant rose,
Mindful of lips so often pressed to mine;
Mindful of words love fragrant at life's close,
Now mute the voice for which I daily pine.
Farewell, dear voice! Farewell, dear heart!
How sweet to love! How sad to part!

"Like as a fading flower man perisheth,"
And yet not so—the heart so true to mine
Still lives, still loves—a victor over death,
For that dear heart I shall not always pine.
Farewell, dear love! Farewell, dear heart
Till we shall meet, and never part.

STUDYING TORNADOES.

How Wind-Storm Reporters Do Their Work.

The Difference Between a Cyclone and a Tornado—The Former Belongs to the East and the Latter to the West.

... storms are diametrically opposed, though commonly spoken of as similar."

CYCLONES AND TORNADOES.

"Are the storms then which lay waste our Western country tornadoes and not cyclones?" was asked.

"Tornadoes, every one of them," was the reply. "A cyclone was never seen as far West as the Mississippi. The cyclone is a production of the West Indies, and is unknown during the summer months. During September and October the heated tropical currents develop vast rotary storms from 500 to 1,500 miles in diameter, which sweep in a parabolic curve against the South Atlantic coast. The cool trade winds blowing down the coast deflect their course and send them sweeping inland. Passing northward they describe their curving flight as far as Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and then rush with howling force across the Newfoundland Banks. Some of them reach England and Ireland. The same storm ravages the coast of Japan, and is called a typhoon. The tremendous breadth of cyclones seldom gives local evidence of their circular sweep. Their calm centers are much dreaded by navigators. The Signal Service cautions mariners against sailing into a 'cyclone center.' The atmosphere is always striving to retain its equilibrium, and so long as some parts of the earth get warmer than others storms will rage."

"Is the tornado a tropical production?"

"Not by any means," replied the Signal Service officer. "On the contrary, that dangerous visitor comes from comparatively cool regions. Sweeping down from the snowy desolate wastes of British America across Dakota, Montana, Wyoming and Minnesota is a cold wind, which often sends the mercury to thirty and forty degrees as it crosses the border. From this huge mass of shapeless clay

"I'll take you," was his friend's reply,
And soon the sculptor's work was done,

The Intelligence Which Distinguishes Animals Things.

Some gentlemen were riding on a train one hot day and sending clouds of smoke out of the windows of the smoking car, and telling stories to while away the time. The conversation turned on the intelligence of animals, and several related incidents that had come under their observation, which demonstrated that animals had sense. One told of a horse he had that would wait around saloons half the night, waiting for him, going from one saloon to another, with the buggy, and when he was drunk enough, and his friends had loaded him into the buggy, the horse would go home on a slow walk, and rap on the window with his nose, and wake the man's wife up to let him in, and the next day the horse would look ashamed of his master. Another told of a retriever dog he had that would retrieve nothing but canvassed hams. He would steal a ham in front of a grocery, or in a storeroom of a neighbor's house, and always bring the ham home in good shape. The man said one such dog could earn half ...

THE STEAM PLOW.

Difficulties Which Are Encountered and the Changes Which Must Be Made.

The locomotive had scarcely drawn the first train of cars over a track formed of two parallel bars of iron before inventors turned their minds to the matter of drawing a plow or a gang of plows by steam power. It is likely that as many horses, mules and oxen are employed in drawing plows as would be required to haul all the products of the fields to market. The introduction of railroads greatly reduced the number of draft animals that farmers were once required to keep by doing much of the work they once performed. The introduction of a steam plow would render it possible to raise large fields of many kinds of crops with very few draft animals, or with none at all. A locomotive propelled by steam power that could draw several plows, might also draw harrows, cultivators and harvesters. It is possible, even probable, that a steam locomotive may be made that will not only do most of the work in fields now performed by horses and other draft animals, but draw the products of the farm to the nearest railway station or steamboat landing. If such an invention is ever perfected, as great a revolution will be produced in farming as the railroad produced in the old methods of transportation by means of draft animals.

Steam plowing by means of a traction engine, or rather by the use of two engines, one placed at each extremity of the field to be plowed, has for many years been a success on a few large estates in England and in a few countries on the continent of Europe. This method of steam plowing is costly, and is not applicable to small farms. The engines are expensive, and wire cables equal in length to that of the field to be plowed are necessary. The engines must be moved every time the gang of plows is driven across the field. The plows must be guided by hand, so that about as many men are required to plow by steam power as when draft animals are employed. The saving is in the use of draft animals and their feed. This is partly balanced by the cost of fuel. In England, however, soft coal suitable for firing on engines is very cheap, while horse feed and horse flesh are dear. Machinery made of metal is cheaper there, and the wages of farm laborers lower. All these circumstances are favorable to the use of the steam plow, and have contributed to whatever success it has achieved. Still, the use of the steam ...

Chased the Flies from Baby's Face.

[Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.]

Dog stories are always in order provided they are true. A gentleman in one of the suburban wards owns a fine specimen of the Spanish breed, which is very fond of children, and when any little ones visit his master's house constitutes himself their companion, playmate and guardian. A few days ago a lady with an infant visited the gentleman, and in the course of the day the child was laid on a pillow on the floor to amuse itself for a time. The dog took his place near the little one, as usual. The day was hot and the flies bad, and they made the baby the target of frequent attacks. This rendered her restless. Doggie watched her for a few minutes, and then, walking close up, with his nose or paw, drove away every fly as soon as it lit on the baby's face, and did it so gently, too, as not to disturb her in the least. The dog's actions attracted the attention of the mother and others, who were filled with astonishment at his thoughtful kindness. This story has the merit of truth.

DR. JOHN BULL'S Smith's Tonic Syrup FOR THE CURE OF FEVER and AGUE Or CHILLS and FEVER, AND ALL MALARIAL DISEASES.

The proprietor of this celebrated medicine justly claims for it a superiority over all remedies ever offered to the public for the SAFE, CERTAIN, SPEEDY and PERMANENT cure of Ague and Fever, or Chills and Fever, whether of short or long standing. He refers to the entire Western and Southern country to bear him testimony to the truth of the assertion that in no case whatever will it fail to cure if the directions are strictly followed and carried out. In a great many cases a single dose has been sufficient for a cure, and whole families have been cured by a single bottle, with a perfect restoration of the general health. It is, however, prudent, and in every case more certain to cure, if its use is continued in smaller doses for a week or two after the disease has been checked, more especially in difficult and long-standing cases. Usually this medicine will not require any aid to keep the bowels in good order. Should the patient, however, require a cathartic medicine after having taken three or four doses of the Tonic, a single dose of KENT'S VEGETABLE FAMILY PILLS will be sufficient. Use no other.

A Shameless Enterprise

[illegible] Bull, the head butcher of the Sioux Indians, is at Detroit in some connection with a "Wild West" show. Sitting Bull is the brute who led and directed the horrible expedition on the Little Big Horn in 1876. That was not a battle, but a massacre. There was nothing in his warfare which entitled him to the rights of a belligerent. It was a warfare governed by the same malignant spirit that prompted the warfare of Wirz upon the Union soldiers in Andersonville. What would have been thought of the men who only nine years after Wirz's savage deeds should have taken him through the country as a moneymaking curiosity and what would have become of Wirz if such a thing had been attempted? Sitting Bull's warefare was characteristic of a bloodthirsty, ferocious, bestial bush whacker. And the murderous barbarity displayed by him in the ambush where the gallant Custer and his brave comrades lost their lives is his chief claim to the distinction which makes it a good speculation to carry him through the country for exhibition.

Failure to enforce the laws of the United States, the execution of which would have resulted in the hanging of this truculent and murderous savage, makes possible this shameless exhibition. It does not seem possible that the people of Michigan, which Custer claimed as his State and in whose limits lived nine of the brave men who met a horrible death at his side, can feel only a morbid curiosity as to the murderer of their heroic fellow-citizens—that curiosity which would prompt them to run after this brutal butcher and be gratified at a sight of his brutish face. Have they forgotten the emotions which stirred their souls when the news of that awful butchery on the Little Big Horn was first announced? or were these emotions so superficial that they can now look with equanimity upon the author of the crime which made widows of many noble women and left mutilated in that valley of death as chivalrous a leader and as staunch soldiers as ever marched against a foe? There are old soldiers in this State whom Custer led to victory in the war of the rebellion. Have they, too, forgotten the heroism and nobility of the man they once revered? Unless the memory of these things is dead Michigan ought not to be a good State for Sitting Bull to visit.—Ex.

The soldiers' home will accommodate 300 and is to cost $100,000. The committee ask for plans and specifications, and will give $1,000 for the best and $500 for the second best. Address Col. S. Wells and Gen. B. R. Pierce, Grand Rapids.

Virginia dispatches proudly tell us that the Democratic candidate for Governor of Virginia has been riding the saddle used by Gen. Robert E. Lee in the late war, to his political appointments. Confederate flags also escort him. Will not some of the Democratic brethren admonish Fitzhugh Lee that he is "waving the bloody shirt?"

Mrs. Jeffries is prepared to furnish good Rooms and good Board to resorters on reasonable terms. Inquire at Jeffries market opposite Bridge St. House.

—Geo. Sherwood arrived home to-day.

The schooner Willard A. Smith will be hauled out here for minor repairs.

The tug Payne has been at the machine shop dock for the past few days.

The propeller Faxton took six hundred barrels of flour and feed to Manistee and Ludington Friday.

The schooner [illegible] went [illegible] at Bell's dock, this side of Petoskey yesterday in the gale. She was discharging coal at the dock. She also had on board an engine and boiler for Mitchell of East Jordan.

The schooner Narragansett in the heavy weather of Thursday morning, on her way here from St. Ignace, ore laden, lost one of her jibs, and her fore and mizzen gaffs. Her captain telephoned here for a tug, and the Martin went after her Friday morning. She will repair here.

The schooner Surprise is in trouble. She arrived down the lake Friday, loaded with wood, and when alongside the dock discovered that she was leaking badly—so badly that it was difficult to keep her free. Capt. Ericksen wired the tug Hall, of Frankfort, which arrived Sunday morning and took her in tow for Milwaukee. In getting her into shape for going through the bridge, the line slipped the post, and she went head first for Nichols's mill yard, running her jibboom into a lumber pile and swung around, breaking it half way to bowsprit. The Hall left with her at 10:30 a. m., with an extra crew on board to keep the pumps going.

The winning of the second yacht race in the international series on the 16th by the Puritan settlers the question of supremacy for the present. The first race was in quiet water and the believers in the Genesta's superiority confidently asserted that a good wind would show her the victor. On the 16th, however, with a wind blowing 37 miles an hour much of the time the American boat outsailed her rival and did it handsomely. The race was a close one and reflects credit on both contestants. The Puritan crossed the winning line at 4.09 and the Genesta at 4.10,15. It was a beautiful contest and evoked great enthusiasm, both crews being warmly cheered at the close.

The propeller Fountain City of the Lake Superior transit company's line arrived at Detroit on the evening of the 18th with her bows badly bruised, the result of a collision in Portage river. The craft with which she collided was the schooner Kingfisher, belonging to the tow of the steam barge H. B. Tuttle. The details of the accident could not be learned, as the Fountain City stopped only a few minutes before proceeding on her way to Buffalo and the officers were reticent. A passenger on board the boat, however, stated that the steamer struck the Kingfisher a heavy blow amid ships, crushing her bulwarks and staving in some of her planking. The damage to the steamer was slight. Besides the slight injury to her bulwarks her port anchor stock was broken.

The cup for which the yachts Genesta and Puritan are now contesting is held in this country by virtue of the sailing of the yacht America, was won thirty-four years ago, and has never been recaptured by English sails. It was offered by the Royal Yacht Club in 1851, during the great World's Fair of that year, open to yachts from all nations. The race in which the America carried off the cup was sailed on August 22, there being eighteen entries. The America won by twenty minutes ahead of the best of the other vessels, the Aurora. The cup thus won became the property of the New York Yacht Club in July, 1857, the America's owners having transferred it to the club. In 1870 an attempt was made to recover the cup. The race came off on August 8 of that year, between the English yacht Cambria, owned by James Ashbury, and a fleet of American yachts. The Cambria came in tenth in the race, the Magic first and the old America second. In 1871 another trial was made by Mr. Ashbury, who seemed determined to get back the cup. In this contest, the American yachts Columbia and Sappho won five out of eight races arranged for. Twice more, in 1876 and in 1881, American yacht men had to defend the cup. The contestants came from Canada and were badly beaten by the Americans.
